

She Knows More About Poker Than Greek—but She's a Great Teacher

Not all of the women employed by the University of Nebraska can boast of a degree. Not all of them can keep their hands soft and white. Not all of them are listed in the "Roster of Faculty and Students."

But that is no sign that some of those who are not so honored and recognized, cannot teach every Nebraska student a lesson of utmost importance.

There is one woman working for this institution whose work necessitates old clothes and soiled hands, whose hours are long, whose duties are monotonous and tiresome—but she would make a wonderful instructor for a class that might be called "Practical Philosophy of Life."

She must be about 45 or 50 years old, but you would only guess her age as 35. She was one of a large family of children on a North Dakota farm. She went to school a few months a year and the remainder of the time did the chores, helped take care of the family, and played poker with the hired men.

She came to Lincoln and rode on an elevator for the first time in her life, with a 3-months-old baby in her arms. She stayed here and raised a family of five in abject poverty.

Now those children have all grown up and are out taking care of themselves—not her. Their father is A. W. O. L. So this mother of five is working for the University of Nebraska for a few cents an hour, doing work that many of our "brilliant leaders" might scorn.

But she smiles! That's the magnificent thing about her story. There is never a joke told that she doesn't laugh, and she can tell more than her share herself, if you stop and listen to them. She never gets mad at the boss. She never quarrels with her companions in labor. She's a "jolly good fellow" at all times and on all occasions.

What bigger lesson could any student learn? If you are down and out, if your allowance isn't what it ought to be, if your troubles are many and harrowing—cultivate the acquaintance of your janitor, your chambermaid, (your inferior, if you please,) because—you might learn something!
