A CAUTION

Last week when the Colgate football team played in the Nebraska stadium for the first time student rooters made a serious error in their over-enthusiastic support of the Huskers. They began to cheer when the eastern eleven was penalized. Prompt action by the cheer leaders halted the shout, but not before it was heard. There should be no repetition of such unsportsmanlike conduct at Lawrence tomorrow.

ALPHA KAPPA PSI

A district convention of Alpha Kappa Psi, national honorary society, opens today. This is the second such convention this year for Nebraska. Just as cities benefit through securing conventions, the University benefits by each convention that can be brought to the campus. The middle west has been an unfavored location for holding of national conventions. But the barrier is falling, as more and more organizations come to see the advantages of providing a central meeting point. If Nebraska groups offer the invitation, Lincoln will probably be chosen for a number of national conventions.

SAW NEBRASKA PLAY.

Football, it is rumored, is a difficult game to learn. The rumor probably is close to the truth. Many men can remember that when they saw their first game of football they thought there was no point to it; baseball was by far the better and more interesting sport. But that time is long ago for most University people. This clipping from a small town paper which credited it to the Norfolk Press might recall the layman's view of the game:

FOOTBALL—Last Saturday I witnessed my first football game and I think it will be the last one, too. As a guest of the University of Nebraska at Lincoln the editors saw the first game of the season, Illinois and Nebraska. Not knowing the game the plays didn't mean anything. All I could see was two bunches of young huskies lined up. One of them would grab the ball and try to run away with it but the others knocked him down and jumped on his back, turned him over and jumped on his tummy and took the ball away from him and then thirty thousand people stood up and yelled until they were hoarse. At the end of the game they were lined up for another attack when suddenly they got up and walked away just as if the whistle had blown and it was time to quit work. All I can see to football as a course of study at a university is that it teaches them how to take something away from a man by force and make him like it.

Perhaps those of us who are attending the University to learn to make a living had better drop most of our classes and go in for football; it might pay in this age of competition.

A MYSTERY.

University rules were broken. The offenders were discovered. The list of offenders and the punishment allotted to them were made public by the authorities. The Daily Nebraskan, in accordance with its conservative policy of non-suppression of the news, carried the story. Then—some persons "with the best interests of the University at heart" rose to petty larceny and took from the business office of the Nebraskan a considerable number of papers lest they be mailed to the high schools of the state. The University authorities responsible had permitted the distribution of the issue; and then the papers were whisked away by arch-patriots. It reminds one of the good old musical comedy with its numerous plots and counterplots to save or overthrow the kingdom.

FILE FOR CLASS DEBATE TRYOUTS

Teams Will Discuss Ku Klux Klan in Annual Tournament.

Four freshmen, one sophomore and one junior have signed up for inter-class debate try-outs to be held October 29. The question is, "Should State Governments make the Ku Klux Klan Legal?"

Each speaker in the try-outs will be allowed five minutes, except the first speaker in each group, who will be given four minutes for direct address and two minutes for rebuttal after the other speeches. Each speaker should give both direct argument and refutation.

The debates will be held about one month after the try-outs, the freshmen meeting the sophomores and the juniors debating the seniors in the first contests. The winners will meet later to decide the championship. Nebraska chapter of Delta Sigma Rho, national intercollegiate debating society, is making all arrangements and students wishing to try out should see Hugh B. Cox in the office of The Daily Nebraskan, University Hall 10.

Major Erickson Commands Largest Infantry Unit in the United States Army

The R. O. T. C. unit that students casually watch every day at the University is the largest infantry unit in the United States army. How many students have realized that Major Sidney Erickson is in command of the most complete infantry regiment that carries the Stars and Stripes?

Last spring Major Erickson sent a picture of the gold-star inspection to Colonel Frank W. Rowell, then director of infantry in the office of the Chief of Staff. After looking at the picture showing the field covered with three infantry battalions, Colonel Rowell wrote back to Major Erickson that with the possible exception of Fort Sam Houston, the largest infantry unit in the army was probably the R. O. T. C. unit at the University of Nebraska.

Since the end of the Great War, Congress has cut the United States army from its war strength of more than four million men to its present strength of 125,000 men. It is a curious fact that there are 250,000 policemen in this country to protect us from one another and 125,000 soldiers to protect us from all of the other people in the world. This enormous cut in the standing army shattered divisions and regiments and reduced them to such a low number that the units could not function as a battalion, regiment, or division. In most cases, companies of about fifty men, smaller than the companies that drill on our field every day, are used to keep the unit intact.

As a result of the divisions and subdivisions of the standing army, Nebraska's R. O. T. C. unit may be recognized as the largest infantry unit in the United States army and Major Erickson may be in command of the most complete regiment in the army.
