A WORTHY CREED.

"Back the team, win or lose" is the creed that Cornhuskers have followed. The result of the Kansas game shows that this creed is worth following. Nebraska was beaten by Oklahoma. There was no murmur of discontent from the students, though they had grown to regard a victory over a Valley opponent as certain. A victory over the Jayhawks on their Homecoming Day would have been doubtful if there had been any "knocking" after the Oklahoma game. This unreserved backing of the team, whether it wins or loses, has laid the foundation for the rest of the season, and made it more than likely that Nebraska will win every other game on the schedule.

Contrast this spirit and its results with that of another university. The following editorial appeared in the columns of the daily paper of New York University, and seemed to have the approbation of the student body:

HOLD ON TO THE BALL!

When a team loses 130 yards in penalties and fumbles from punts, there is little comment to be made except to set down the revealing facts. Union's highly-touted 100-yard dash backfield was held pretty well; Bolden's running and stiff-arming, Howley's tackling, Holden's kicking, Hawes' and Sehre's generalship were all good. But if the Varsity can't learn to hold on to a football and judge punts and play the game according to the referee's conception of the rules it might just as well turn in its uniforms and take up mumble-peg.

We hope Captain Treacy and his men will learn to handle a pigskin during the week—for City College is coming to Ohio field Saturday with ranking memories of 7-0 and 28-0 defeats. It is certainly discouraging to see the beautiful run of Bolden for 80 yards with perfect interference be equalled in scoring by the simple expedient of picking up the ball after someone has dropped it.

We realize perfectly well that the team is still suffering from downright greenness—but man alive! let's learn to hold on to the ball!

The next game of this team was won only after the star, Bolden, intercepted a pass and ran 70 yards to a touchdown. The Varsity that was told to hold on to the ball made many fumbles, and was once held for three downs on the opponent's one-yard line.

STADIUM PLEDGES.

When the campaign for the erection of the stadium was begun, those in charge probably did not expect every student pledge to be paid in full, but they felt justified in going forward with the work because they expected that a very large percentage of them would be paid. It is probable that they did not look for more than average results in pledges fulfilled.

Figures corrected to July 1 of this year show that over half of the pledges were delinquent at that time. It is hard to think that this represents the extent to which an average group would keep a promise. It is even harder to think that a group supposed to be above average would respond so poorly.

No one has made a determination from the theory of probabilities of the per cent of pledges that should be paid up for such an undertaking as the erection of a memorial stadium, but it is not difficult to see that Nebraska students have not shown themselves very trustworthy in the matter so far. And trustworthy is the correct term. Those who carried through the stadium project trusted in the students for a share of the expense.

The request is made, and it is reasonable and fair, that University of Nebraska students keep their promise to pay a share of the expense of building the stadium, which is intended primarily for their own use.
