A GENEROUS SCRIBE.

"Iowa States' unexpected victory over Drake last Saturday changed the standing in the Missouri Valley conference and placed Missouri in the lead," reads a New York dispatch in one of the Lincoln dailies Monday evening.

AT STANFORD.

A Stanford senior was handcuffed and chained to a tree for an hour one day last week, while hundreds of students crowded around hurling taunts at him.

"TIMES HAVE CHANGED"

Strong personality and individual responsibility were characteristic of the college students of forty years ago, says University of California graduate who was recently interviewed by a staff member of the student daily.

The students of forty years ago associated more closely with the professors, talked with them, visited them in their homes; they respected the professors highly and valued their opinions above all, says the alumnus.

In this California graduates hinted criticism that originality is disappearing because of the co-operation on the college campus of today there lies more than a grain of truth.

prompts original thought—tends to lose its influence over the mind of the student.

In this age of co-operation, every individual considers first whether his action or word will injure some group; unless he decides that it cannot possibly do so, he drops his original intention, no matter how excellent it may have been.

Organization into groups is the most effective means of securing what every member of that group wants, certainly, but the "team work on the campus" of which the Californian speaks leaves less character-building responsibility for the individual.

DUMB-BELL.

It is time someone noticed the poor dumb-bell who comes to college for four years and goes out unwept, unhonored and unsung. No one but his family knows he has a diploma. Perhaps he hasn't a family.

In classes he took notes one day a week. Other days he sat and dreamed about how tired he was from studying the night before.

When graduation day approaches perhaps he recalls someone he might invite to see him receive his diploma.

He has experienced all phases of college. And he is tired—worn out trying to keep up the pace.

When one considers the number of people who drift with the current of ten-thousand students, one does not wonder why he is unnoticed.

mob this way or that by showing how intelligent he believed.

The Republican party picked on the college student and organized him in clubs in all the colleges in the country. The Democratic party picked on college presidents, as being slightly better bait than undergraduates.

Now all of this shows half a dozen things. One of them is that the mob likes to be fed stuff about what college men believe.

—are you sure you deserve it?

"Give me a log with Mark Hopkins at one end of it and myself at the other," said, in effect, President Garfield, "and I would not want a better college."

But if Mark Hopkins was an inspired teacher, it is just as true that James A. Garfield was an inspiring student.

Sometimes Garfield's praise of his professor is quoted in disparagement of present day faculties—the assumption being that we as listeners are sympathetic, all that we ought to be—and that it is the teacher who has lost his vision.

Is this often the case?

It is the recollection of one graduate at least that he did not give his professors a chance. Cold to their enthusiasms, he was prone to regard those men more in the light of animated text-books than as human beings able and eager to expound their art or to go beyond it into the realm of his own personal problems.

This is a man to man proposition. Each has to go half way. Remember, there are two ends to the log.
