The matter evidently began with there should be military training it attempted to set at rest one phase of the discussion of that question.

The article in question reads:

Student opposition to compulsory military drill is having its annual appearance on the University campus. Paul Blanshard, field secretary for the league for industrial democracy, who is said to have done some political work for LaFollette -coln this fall, has sent the ruling of the Wisconsin state attorney general declaring the land grant act makes it compulsory for institutions sharing in the funds to provide military training but does not require that military training be compulsory. In accordance with this decision, "the state of Wisconsin by act of legislature abolished the compulsory feature and made military training optional in the state university which is a land-grant college," he states.

Wisconsin is said to be the only state with a land-grant college which does not interpret the spirit of the Morrill act to require compulsory military training in institutions participating in the funds created by the act. The University of Nebraska requires each undergradnate man to receive military instruction during four semesters.

Its whole purpose is evidently to ridicule any honest questioning by students and to intimate meaningly that the students have been incited to radical action by a "red."

"Give me a log with Mark Hopkins at one end of it and myself at the other," said, in effect, President Garfield, "and I would not want a better college."

But if Mark Hopkins was an inspired teacher, it is just as true that James A. Garfield was an inspiring student.

Sometimes Garfield's praise of his professor is quoted in disparagement of present day faculties -the assumption being that we as listeners are sympathetic, all that we ought to be-and that it is the teacher who has lost his vision.

Is this often the case?

Industry.

It is the recollection of one graduate at least that he did not give his professors a chance. Cold to their enthusiasms, he was prone to regard those men more in the light of animated text-books than as human beings able and eager to expound their art or to go beyond it into the realm of his own personal problems.

This is a man to man proposition. Each has to go half way. Remember, there are two ends to the log.
