LEGISLATURE IN SESSION

With the state legislature in session, ten blocks from the city campus, University of Nebraska students again have an opportunity—of which they do not usually take advantage—to observe the workings of the legislative branch of state government. Students are assumed to compose an enlightened group interested in the problems of representative government. Unfortunately, most of the students seem unconcerned over what the "general public" thinks of them, and since they have no interest in the procedure of the legislature, they never visit the capitol during a session.

Perhaps an appeal to "loyalty to Nebraska" would be a more effective means of persuading students to attend than would an attempt to point out the advantages of attendance. After they have entered one of the halls they cannot help hearing what is said and observing the procedure. Those who are persuaded to spend enough time in this way to understand what is going on can never afterward be accused of ignorance of the operation of the government under which they live and which represents them.

At any rate, every student should try to make at least one short visit during the session. Some of them will themselves be representatives or senators after graduation, but most of them will enter business or a profession and spend the rest of their lives far from the seat of government. If they are to be intelligent voters, then, they should have some knowledge of actual legislative proceedings.

SUPPORT LINDLEY.

The latest developments in the trouble at the University of Kansas lend a strong defense to statements of Chancellor E. H. Lindley that his removal is sought by Governor Jonathan Davis for political reasons. The University Daily Kansan for January 7 published the text of a resolution adopted by the Women's Self-Government Association of the University of Kansas:

"Be it resolved by the executive council of the Women's Self-Government Association of the University of Kansas, representing the women students of the University: That we believe the best interests of higher education in Kansas will be served by the retaining of Dr. E. H. Lindley as Chancellor of the University.

"From a close observation of his work in this institution, we are unanimous in our conclusion that he has proved himself to be an honest, able, and fair executive and a gentleman of the highest and best ideals.

"We know that he has sought to serve the state by serving the interests of the students of this University. His outlook has been broad, kind, and liberal and his contact with the student life has been continuously and unmistakably sympathetic.

"Furthermore, from our intimate knowledge of University life, we know that Chancellor Lindley has not procrastinated in the affairs that concern us.

"It is our opinion that the removal of Chancellor Lindley will prove a serious blow not only to the University of Kansas, but to the whole state."

A meeting was planned for Wednesday evening at the University to consider petitions to be sent to Governor-elect Paulen asking that Chancellor Lindley be retained.

The students are not the only ones interested in the cause of the Chancellor. The Kansas State Teachers Association recently circulated an article advocating adoption of a system somewhat like that governing the University of Nebraska. Following is a part of the article:

"The removal of Chancellor Lindley is more than a blow at an esteemed and honored educator. It is more than the crippling of a great University. It is, in a very large sense, a vicious attack upon the entire educational system of the State of Kansas. For, if the Governor can, on a personal whim, inject politics in the University of Kansas what assurance is there that politics sooner or later will not color our entire system of education? What assurance does any superintendent, principal or teacher have, in the light of this striking example, of inviolability of contract or of continued tenure through efficient service? What assurance do any of the state schools have that hereafter these schools will not be made the playthings of the politicians?

"Whatever fruit this disaster may bear, it should result in a complete revision of our system of laws governing the State educational institutions. It is high time that these institutions be so far removed from any political control that no Governor may use them as a target for his personal vengeance. These schools should be removed from the jurisdiction of the State Board of Administration and placed in the hands of a separate board made up of high class men and women who will accept appointment only because of their desire to further the educational interests of the State. Such a board should be a non-pay board consisting, say, of seven members appointed for a seven-year period in order to give the board permanency and to remove it from the unfair domination of the Governor's office."

THE OIL SUPPLY.

Leaders of the American oil industry have been called to Washington to confer with the administration's oil conservation board composed of Secretary of War Weeks, Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior Work and Secretary of Commerce Hoover. "Present rapid depletion of the nation's oil reserves" is to be the subject of discussion, press dispatches state.

This alert preparation for inevitable exhaustion of the oil supply, which will probably not occur for several hundreds of years, is interesting in the face of a dismissal of the problem as not critical by an authoritative article in the official journal of the American Chemical Society. The article, prepared by Dr. W. F. Shaphorst of Newark, N. J., is reported to read:

"Because of the growth in oil production it can now be safely said that even purchasers of motor cars need fear no cessation of oil supply, and prospective users of fuel oil in chemical and industrial plants need no longer ask each other the usual question, 'Will it pay us to convert over to oil burning? Will the supply of oil be exhausted before we get our investment back?'"

"Those who have made a study of the matter declare that the supply of oil is ample for hundreds of years. There are 15,000,000 automobiles in the United States, all of them using as much gasoline as they want.

"If restrictions are ever to be made anywhere, gasoline supply to the automobile field will surely be curtailed before the essential industries are touched. The chemical industry is, of course, an essential industry."

The oil supply is not unlimited. Sometime in the course of the next few centuries the supply will be scarce. Yet it is being recklessly used, with hardly a warning from the men of science who should be the most interested in the conservation of the supply.

Twenty Years Ago

With the presidential election only a month off, the political bosses of the sophomore class were clearing their decks for action and the generals on both sides were lining up their men for active campaign work. It was rumored that the machine in power had not done all in its power toward safeguarding the interests of the class and had been unfair in making appointments. Due to this rumor a party of liberalists had been organized that proposed to "fight fire with fire." The only evidence of the coming political storm was to be found in the little groups of sophomores that were earnestly talking the matter over. The women were taking advantage of the woman suffrage clause and their votes ranked above par.

The basketball team was working hard in preparation for the games that were to come in the last part of the month. An additional trip into the west was being planned in which games with the Cheyenne "Giants," University of Colorado, Greeley and Colorado colleges were to be played. New suits had arrived for the team. They were very similar to the old ones, with black pants and black jerseys with scarlet ring and the cream "N" in center.

KANSAS—Radio station KFKU of the University of Kansas took the air Monday for the first time, with an educational program and musical numbers. Good reception was noticed.
