Registration for the second semester had opened. The system of registration then in operation is different from that now in use. All students were required in advance of the registration days to secure a numbered ticket to meet the committee on assignments and to register. These tickets were impartially distributed on the "first come, first served" plan without reference to the college or year of the applicant. Each ticket entitled the holder to prompt attention during the hour and day of registration week mentioned on it. In this way the number of students to be accommodated at any one time was limited. This system also did away with the last minute rush to register.

Any undergraduate student who did not register at the time assigned to him would be unable to register that week and was forced to register in the next week and pay the late registration fee of three dollars. Any change in registration was treated the same way unless the student was forced to change because of a failure or condition in the subject carried in the first semester.

Four students were running in the campaign for editor-in-chief of The Daily Nebraskan, two were applying for the position of managing editor, and four for the position of associate editors, with two positions to be filled. The ballots were so constructed that it was possible for the voter to express his first choice and his second choice for every office.

The Athletic Board had approved the football schedule for 1915 that had been worked out. The schedule called for games in Lincoln with Drake, Kansas Aggies, Notre Dame, Wesleyan, and Iowa. Games with Ames and the University of Kansas to be played on their fields had also been scheduled. The one open date was to be filled with a game played in Lincoln with Washburn.

The islands are forever growing as the lime secretions of the thousands of different species of crustaceans build up the shore lines in a surprisingly short time. And so now where we see only bare coral reefs may be within the course of time fertile islands.

nalled to officials that they were through, leaving a black space in two difficult words in order that they might secure first place and get the hundred points. Sooner wordsters quit the field ten minutes later.

The thrilling moments of the contest came when the officials began to grade the work of the two teams. E. A. Evans, editor of the Oklahoma News was the chief judge.

A peculiar feature of the game was that most of the words missed were very ordinary and in common usage. No word of more than five letters was used. Some of the words missed were: rooms, cue, tenor, petal, seeds, and kites. The board contained 961 squares and had 370 horizontal and vertical words to be filled in. Approximately three hundred of these words contained five letters.

The official titles of the different members of the teams were: sagacious scribbler, erudite eraser, synonym seeker, grand glossologist, and learned lexicographer.

At one time it was rumored that the eligibility of Captain John T. Tedrowe, of the University of Oklahoma team, was to be contested on the grounds that Tedrowe is married, and consequently disqualified for participation in the amateur cross-word gymnastics. When interviewed on the subject, the only statement that he would make was, "I am a married man. I ran a collection agency for four years. I guess I ought to know the meaning of cross words."

Following this victory the University of Oklahoma team is seriously contemplating issuing an open challenge to any institution of equal standing interested in cross-word puzzles.

The Kansas Aggies continued their winning streak Monday by defeating Drake. The Ags are now on a par with Kansas, whom they defeated last week. Looking at the percentages the Valley race looks like a close and fast one.
