CHARGES SUBSIDIZING.

Huge sums of money have been given by the multi-millionaires of the nation to the endowment funds of universities and colleges. These gifts have always been considered purely philanthropic and the givers have been applauded for their generosity. Now comes Senator Robert M. LaFollette, whom men call radical, progressive or conservative, according to their own political convictions, with a charge that the educational system of the country is being subsidized. The New York Times of January 22 contains this dispatch:

That the monopoly interests of this country are attempting to subsidize education, is the charge made by Senator Robert M. La Follette in a signed statement in his magazine today. Columbia University is held as an example and President Nicholas Murray Butler is quoted by the senator as admitting that "existing policies of taxation" are checking the large donations.

"The growth of the subsidy system in our universities and colleges is contemporaneous with the growth of monopoly in industry," Senator La Follette says. "As wealth has become concentrated more and more in a few hands, subsidies have increased until it may be said that higher education looks to the monopoly system rather than to the public or to the state for its support."

"The gifts made by George Eastman of the Eastman Kodak Company and J. B. Duke of the Tobacco trust include a provision typical of awards of this character of the highest public interest. Both donors cover their millions in the form of stock and industrial enterprises in which they are engaged. "With an endowment of upward $50,000,000 Columbia is one of the richest of American universities, as its president, Mr. Butler, is one of the most subservient defenders of the monopoly system."

"President Butler toadies to all the millionaires who have made or are likely to make large gifts to education by his declaration that the future of education rests upon further exemption of great wealth from taxation."

Senator La Follette's charges are sweeping. If any American universities are becoming subsidized—consciously contributing to the cause of the capitalist as against that of the laborer—then the officials of those universities must change their tactics at once. Disseminating of false "propaganda," especially by those who are looked up to as disinterested authorities, is detestable; no one and no institution can achieve anything worth while through aiding the rich against the poor.

But these gifts do serve a purpose; whether or not they were made with that purpose in mind, they have served to halt the growing resentment of laboring classes against the amassing of enormous wealth by a few men. "Isn't it better," ask the defenders of the present system, "to concentrate much wealth in the hands of a few men who will turn it to a good purpose?" Superficial reasoning of this kind, probably, led Senator La Follette to write his comment. His opinions are at least worth consideration.

DEFEND FOOTBALL.

College football, with its huge stadiums, has encountered bitter criticism in the last few years. The sport merely trains further those who are already more than physically fit, while men who need physical training watch from the sidelines, say the opponents of the sport as it is at present conducted. The football men seem to have located a reply, at last.

Little, former assistant to Yost at Michigan, and lately appointed director of athletics at Wisconsin says: "It has been the aim of the athletic departments of many universities in the past few years to develop a system of athletic competition for all students. Intramural athletics are coming to play a greater part in university life and the benefits of athletics that in the past have been for the few are now open to the majority. But in order that athletic programs be a success it is a virtual necessity that the athletic plants constructed be of a magnitude great enough to care for greater numbers."

E. K. Hall, chairman of the American Intercollegiate Rules Committee, makes it even stronger:

"If the dream of general participation of entire student bodies in intramural sport ever becomes an actuality, it will be due in part to the stimulus and support of intercollegiate football." Evidently, these men believe that the end justifies the means.—They may rest now, on their laurels. They seem to have successfully refuted the chief objection to the emphasis placed upon football by American universities.

—and even electrical engineers are needed in the electrical industry

Nowadays the electrical industry needs so many types of men that it may be well to point out it still needs engineers, good engineers—but with a difference.

Vision, initiative, technical skill are needed qualities, now as always. But here's another. Can you work on the team? Will you be able to back up the other members in the manufacturing and commercial ends of the business?

The engineer today should be no recluse in a laboratory. He can make his work more effective once he sees how it relates to the work of men around him.

In your studies and college activities, you have the chance now to develop this point of view. In the broader activities of the electrical industry, you may have the chance later on to carry it further.
