"Rain" is the outstanding dramatic success of the decade. It's run in New York has never been equalled by a strictly dramatic production. The company that will appear here is the special city cast of distinguished Broadway artists selected by Sam H. Harris, a name that is synonymous with the best the theater has to offer. It is certain to prove the dramatic event of the year and the management suggests the early purchase of seats to avoid disappointment.

OLYMPIAN STUFF

Life around the campus as seen from the Mountain of the Gods.

WELL! WELL!

We hesitated to reveal this dire situation at first, but we have decided that it is to the best interests of the University.

We were pounding faithfully away at our typewriter, when two of the most prominent students on the campus sneaked into the editor's office while the old school's basketball team was fighting Grinnell for the honor and prestige of supremacy in Valley sport circles (as my friend, the sports editor says). They began discussing whether Congress should have the power to annul Supreme Court decisions. What is more, they seemed serious about it. They discussed it with gusto. They were evidently thinking.

Now the University has taken a great deal of care to see that no students think. It has provided a Stadium in which students can amuse themselves; it has organized the curriculum to present a wide field of superficial activity; it has fostered football, basketball, and track events. In fact, the University officials have taken every constructive step to prevent any serious intellectual activity.

And here we are confronted with the picture of two students who have refused to accede to this smothering of mental movement. Something should be done.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Wherever I go they say to me,
"Oh! Have you met Claire Montesrey?"

They greet me with a shout of joy:
"Oh! Do you know Claire Montesrey?"

With one accord they loudly cry:
"Where did you meet Claire Montesrey?"

I hear this question every day:
"What is he like, that Montesrey?"

Tom and Dick and Abe and Erry
Cry, "Do you really know Montesrey?"

I wait until the clamor stops
And coldly say, "One calls it Montesrey."

—CELIA.

Quite. One does. Or, rather, one should.

GREEK CONTEST
STARTS MONDAY

This is a headline written by one of the news editors for the Sunday Nebraskan. In order to prevent any misapprehension we shall state that it refers to the interfraternity track meet. As far as we have been able to determine, no one is interested enough in Greek even to take the course. None, that is, of our best people, so to speak.

PERSONAL:

Jeannette,
I have forgotten your 'phone number again. Will you drop around to the office this afternoon at four? Tea. Pavlova. Claire.

The Innocents Society urges every student to study hard. Students who do not study in school will never amount to anything. Everybody should amount to something.

FROM THE NOTEBOOKS OF ADONIS:

The fear of love, according to some of my philosophical friends, is the beginning of wisdom.

ALL TOO TRUE.

It was a blustery night, and we slipped into the Grand hotel to warm up a bit. Two old chaps were standing there, talking, evidently waiting for a meeting of the Nebraska Historical Society to start.

"Did you know," said the one with the whiskers, "that there is a university in Switzerland that was established there over five hundred years ago and has only a thousand students? Why, we've had our University here for only a little over fifty years, and we have over ten times as many students."

"Yes," added the second, "and we've spent less money on it."

TO SATYRANUS

Will you write us a sketch
Of that fraudulent wretch
Who is known as the witty Montrey?
He's conceived to be clever,
Conceited, however;
No more to be thought of as Claire, woman-shy.

Pray forget you're his friend;
We shall like it no end
If you satirize Claire, king of fops.
We'll enjoy what you say
About clever Montrey,
But remember, you can not floor Mopps.

—POD.

We should rather fancy yes.

We asked our friend, Monsieur X., to write something for us. "You boast yourself a patron of literature! What do you do?"
He answered serenely: "Why, I read it."

PORTRAITS

VI
A DISILLUSIONED MAN

His journal is the record of a disintegrating faith in the natural virtue of man.

At school he was altruistic. He had friends. He exchanged confidences. He trusted his comrades. With one he was especially intimate, a brilliant but cynical young man. To him alone did Wells Gore impart his secret. He lent him the MSS. for criticism.

In a few months he read his article in a magazine. It was furbished up a bit and signed by his friend, who had a deprecatory mention of a preliminary statement made previously by Wells Gore.

WHAT! WHAT!

When the committee in charge of the World Forum programs asked our friend Major Sidney Erickson to give a defence of military training in schools, the Major refused. His long training in the army should have made the Major more fearless.

—CLAIRE MONTESREY.
