Caretaker Was One of First to Give To Growth Fund of Oregon Aggies

One of the caretakers of some of the college buildings of the Oregon Agricultural College located at Corvallis, Ore., was one of the first contributors toward the growth of the school. This man is A. F. Starr, whose children are now attending the school that he helped to build, although he was unable to do so himself.

In 1887, Benton county, Oregon, gave thirty-five acres of land to secure a permanent college at Corvallis. Work was started at once on the construction of the administration building. Before they were assured of the location of the college there, however, it was necessary for the people of that county to raise a large sum of money.

It was at this time that Mr. Starr helped with his bit. He pledged twenty-five dollars, earning every cent of it by grubbing oak wood at a dollar a cord. At that time twenty-five dollars had the buying power of over a hundred dollars today, for men could be hired to work a twelve-hour day for seventy-five cents. Finished lumber for the building was purchased at twenty dollars a thousand. Corvallis at that time had a population of only two thousand people.

Mr. Starr's hobby today is pencil sketching, drawing all his pictures from memory as he knew things a quarter to a half a century ago. In this line Mr. Starr has had few lessons and didn't start to draw until he was past fifty years in age.

WOMEN FIRE IN RIFLE MATCHES

Good Scores Made in First Meets of Season for Women's Team.

The women's rifle team fired a complete four-position match last week for the first time since the organization of the team. The team score was 2,947. The firing from four positions was against the Michigan Aggies. Five other matches for the week were at the prone, and prone and sitting positions.

The prone position total was 919, an average of 91.9 per team member. Vermont and Montana universities were the opponents.

The University of Missouri women fired in the prone and sitting positions. The Nebraska score for this match was 1,758. Cornell University and Washington State College matches were for five women in the prone position only. Nebraska's score was 470.

Marie Hermanek proved herself the premier Nebraska woman marksman in the prone positions with her score of 99, but she fell down considerably in the other positions, especially in the standing.

D. Abbott was high marksman in the four positions with a score of 311. Luella Reckmeyer was only one point behind, with a total of 310.

The shooting gallery is open for women Monday and Tuesday mornings from 9 to 12 o'clock. The team still needs more members to increase the competition and have the required fifteen from whom to choose the high ten for the week.

Captain Eggers, director of marksmanship, thinks that the women's team can improve its score a great deal especially in the standing, kneeling and sitting positions if the team members will practice consistently. Most of the returns will be in this

BLA-A

Isn't human nature just too funny? As you can see this fellow isn't old enough to shave but here he is crying his soul out because his mama won't dress him like his big brother.

You see he has already decided that just as soon as he has any say in his affairs, he'll be wearing a Kuppenheimer suit. Poor devil he can't help how his mother dresses him.
