PROSPECTS FOR CAGE TEAM GOOD

Coach Kline Should Have Good Squad from Which to Select 1926 Team.

With the 1925 basketball season history, thoughts naturally turn to the prospects and outlook for 1926. The game at Nebraska seems to be destined to improve even more next year, and another top-notch team is expected.

With Smaha, Beerle, Andresen, Ekstrom, Kleper, and Black returning, the season of 1926 seems to be a bright spot. Besides these letter men Paige, Reynolds, and a mob of freshmen and sophomores await the beck and call of Coach W. G. Kline.

Who the basketeers will choose as their captain, or whether they will choose it or have it done for them, is unknown. Nebraska should be in the running along with the leaders in 1926.

BALL PRACTICES CONTINUE DAILY

Thirty Men Are Working Out on the Field East of Social Science.

Thirty men are out daily for baseball practices on the field east of Social Sciences and in the Armory. It is expected that the practice will be moved to Rock Island park next week.

The pill-chasers have bright prospects for the season. Nine letter men are back and early practice is limbering them up.

First practices have consisted solely of throwing the ball around. When the weather is nice the practice is outside, but when it is wet the men throw the ball in the Armory. Classes in the Armory slow down practice somewhat.

Among the men who are out are: Captain Ray Janda, Volz, Anderson, Gibbs, Smaha, Ekstrom, Patton, E. Lang, B. Lang, Jardine, Couins, Damerer, Gradvilve, Jones, E. Raun, A. Raun, Edwards, Johnson, Schiefer, Higgins, Fromser, Adams, Scheun, Clem, Harney.

Call for sophomores who wish to try out for baseball manager was issued yesterday afternoon. Sophomores who want to work are to report at the store room in the Armory each day at 3 o'clock.

Large Colleges are Blamed for Delinquency of Their Students

Dr. F. F. Nalder of Washington
State Opposed to Big University Idea.

Large colleges and universities are to a great degree responsible by their very size for the delinquency of the students who congregate there in large numbers, is the belief of Dr. F. F. Nalder, director of general college extension at Washington State college. Dr. Nalder has just returned to his school after a lecture tour of six weeks, during which he lectured on the Pacific Northwest and its resources in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, and Missouri.

In telling of his trip, Mr. Nalder said that he was personally glad to be connected with a small school, "where the best phases of college life are not obscured and overwhelmed by masses of students. The latter condition prevails at the huge state universities in the east. I spoke to groups at the Universities of Minnesota, Michigan, Iowa, Missouri, and at Purdue University of Lafayette, Indiana. In each of these institutions the chief problem is how to realize a fair degree of individual at-ention for the students who congregate in such large numbers."

Dr. Nalder went on to say that, "It becomes impossible where freshmen and sophomore classes run into thousands for any faculty to give young students the individual attention that they should have. As a result, great numbers fall by the wayside, especially in the freshman and sophomore years and are sent home discouraged."

Dr. Nalder also spoke at several of the smaller schools of the middle west and of the east. Among these schools were the Stephens Junior College at Columbia, Missouri, the Western Military Academy at Alton, Illinois, the teachers college at Springfield, Missouri, and the normal school at Charleston, Illinois. He found among some of these schools the tendency to overcome the objectionable feature of the larger schools.

"One attempt to offset this condition is seen in a tendency among certain smaller colleges to reorganize themselves into junior colleges," said Dr. Nalder. "An illustration with which I came in contact was the Stephens Junior College at Columbia, Missouri. That institution for years gave four years of work and struggled along in a meager existence. More recently it became a junior college for women, giving the first two years only, instructing its enrollment and concerning its attention on the best possible education of students of that age. As a result it is meeting with success which it never before had and, finding that people will pay enough for the proper education of that age, the institution is self-supporting."

While on this trip Dr. Nalder showed motion pictures of the state of Washington, showing the natural resources, institutions, and industries.

Fail to Find Significance of Inscriptions on Lead Crosses

Excavations for Lime Kiln
Near Tucson, Arizona,
Lead to Discovery.

Professors at the University of Arizona have failed to reach any definite conclusions regarding the inscriptions on the lead crosses which were found recently while excavating for a lime kiln near Tucson, Arizona. The inscriptions on the inside of the crosses have been kept in a good state of preservation by some unknown substance.

Professor Frank Fowler, professor of Latin at the University of Arizona, has been able to make the following observations concerning these crosses:

"If the character of the Latin on the lead plates in the museum is understood," Professor Fowler said, "it will be seen at once that any attempt to derive from them a connected story is futile. What we have is a collection of phrases and sentences strung together, sometimes with some slight connection, sometimes with none. For the most part these words and phrases have a common characteristic; each, for one reason or another, has some striking peculiarity which would tend to make it stick in the memory. A large number are simply expressions of general application, and hence suitable for quotation. They may be found in lists of Latin expressions common in English literature. In a hasty examination of the list in Webster's unabridged, I counted twenty-seven such expressions found on the plates. A large number are examples of grammatical rules or obdiums such as are only to be found in any Latin grammar. There is one quotation from Horace showing an absolutely unique use of the genitive case, and another from Virgil showing a unique use of the noun in place of a participle. There are several quotations from Latin writers which differ from those mentioned in that they have no general application; for example, one from the Twelve Tables and quoted by Cicero, de Legibus, 2.23, which forbids burial or cremation within the city of Rome; and another from Virgil, Georgics 1.331, which may be translated, 'The earth trembles, fear has brought low the hearts of mortals.'

"If one removes all these phrases and sentences, which are virtually quotations from Latin literature, there is almost nothing left except the dates, the proper names, and several occurrences of the verb regnat (rules). It is possible that a person ignorant of Latin made the collection. It is more probable that the collector was well acquainted with Latin literature. In either case it is hardly possible to suppose that the person responsible for the collection was trying to tell a story. What was his purpose?"

M. B. Shea of American Radiator Company Speaks to Engineers.

Methods of heating were described by M. B. Shea, manager of the Omaha branch of the American Radiator Company, in Mechanical Engineering 207 Tuesday at 10 o'clock, before senior mechanical engineering students.

Mr. Shea is a graduate of Cornell University, with twenty-five years of experience with heating plants. The American Radiator Company which he represents is the largest concern of its kind in the country. He discussed the rating of heating boilers, and types of heating systems, and outlined some of his own experiences in engineering and heating work.

PLANS MADE FOR,
KANSAS RELAYS

Expect Keen Competition in Third Annual Events for Track Athletes.

LAWRENCE, Kan., March 18—
Keen competition is expected at the third annual Kansas Relays here April 18 when universities and high schools from all over the country line up for the events in the Memorial Stadium.

Among the title defenders in the University class who will be on deck to try to retain their championships are Nebraska, Iowa, Northwestern, and Oregon Aggies.

Nebraska holds the title in the half-mile relay, Iowa in the one-mile Northwestern in the two-mile, and Oregon Aggies in the four-mile event. Texas University is the champion of the medley relay.

A new class has been added this year and the military academy division abolished. The new class will include junior colleges and military academies.

Wisconsin, Notre Dame, and other Big Ten and Valley teams are entered with fast teams and are expected to push last year's title holders to the limit.

The referee for the Kansas Relays this year is Knute Rackne, famous coach at Notre Dame University. The starter will be John C. Grover of Kansas City, well known Missouri Valley official, who started the Relay events last year.
