HERESY

"We Are Tired" is the title of an editorial in The Daily Northwestern which recently caused a stir on the campus of that school. It prophesied that about the time that the United States Senate begins to support the League of Nations, the students of Northwestern will say:

We are tired.
We are tired of this everlasting blah-blah about a winning football team.
We are tired of having a football coach who trains forty men and receives as large a salary as four instructors who teach one particular subject to 600 students.
We are tired of having alumni come back and say what a fine halfback there is in Podunk high school, and can't we find a job for him.
We are tired of this stadium bunk whereby 50,000 spectators watch 22 men—or rather employees—battle for supremacy.
We are tired of being told that Northwestern needs more men.

This is heresy, heresy of the rank-and-file kind. It questions, it even flouts, all that college editors have hitherto held sacred. And this is not the only college publication in which signs of rebellion may be found. The same notes of discontent and criticism may be discerned in the editorial columns of a dozen or more college papers.

The conventional idea of the college editor as a "booster" and a sort of glorified press agent for athletic and other "worthy" activities, is passing. Regardless of whether this fact is pleasant, it exists and must be recognized.

STADIUM PLEDGES

Much of the difficulty met in collecting payments on stadium pledges is undoubtedly due to the forgetfulness and carelessness of the students. Most of them are willing to meet a legal and moral obligation such as this which is imposed by one of these pledges. On time payments of this kind, however, the temptation to procrastinate is strong.

Many of them do not realize how absolutely necessary it is that the payments be made on time, and how embarrassing the position of the Memorial Stadium Association is when they are not made. Once this fact is impressed on their minds much of the difficulty will be eliminated.

To the Editor of the Daily Nebraskan:
Not so long ago that the incident has entirely escaped our memory occurred a striking example of what Nebraska students like to think of as "Cornhusker spirit."

During one of the football games

a couple of years ago, a group of Nebraska men were started on a cross-country run, pitted against the same school as the Husker football team faced that day.

Everyone knew that Nebraska stood little chance of carrying honors in this event as the opposing squad was reputed to be one of the best in the Valley. Only by mere chance, seemingly, could the Husker barriers win. At the close of the half of the football game, the runners were scheduled to finish.

The yell leader suddenly announced that the runners were on the home stretch of the weary five-mile run to Belmont and back. All eyes were focused on the west gate of the grandstand (for we had no Stadium then). After a few tense moments, a runner appeared—ran to the finish and fell into waiting arms. It was the captain of the opposing team. This meant that the Nebraskans must score second, third and fourth places to win—not much chance, but the crowd waited.

Then all attention centered on that west gate again. Two runners had appeared side by side—a second look—they were carrying what seemed to be a bundle. As they came closer it was discovered that the bundle was another Husker runner who had fallen during the gruelling contest but who had been picked up by his comrades as they realized that Nebraska (Continued on Page Three.)

ONE field where there is still undeveloped territory, still room for pioneers, is the electrical industry. This will be encouraging news to the man who thinks he was born too late.

If your aptitude is technical, there are years of usefulness ahead of you in helping to design, construct and operate public utility lines. And too, fast-growing markets for electrical apparatus call for more and more college-trained men in the manufacturing end of this industry.

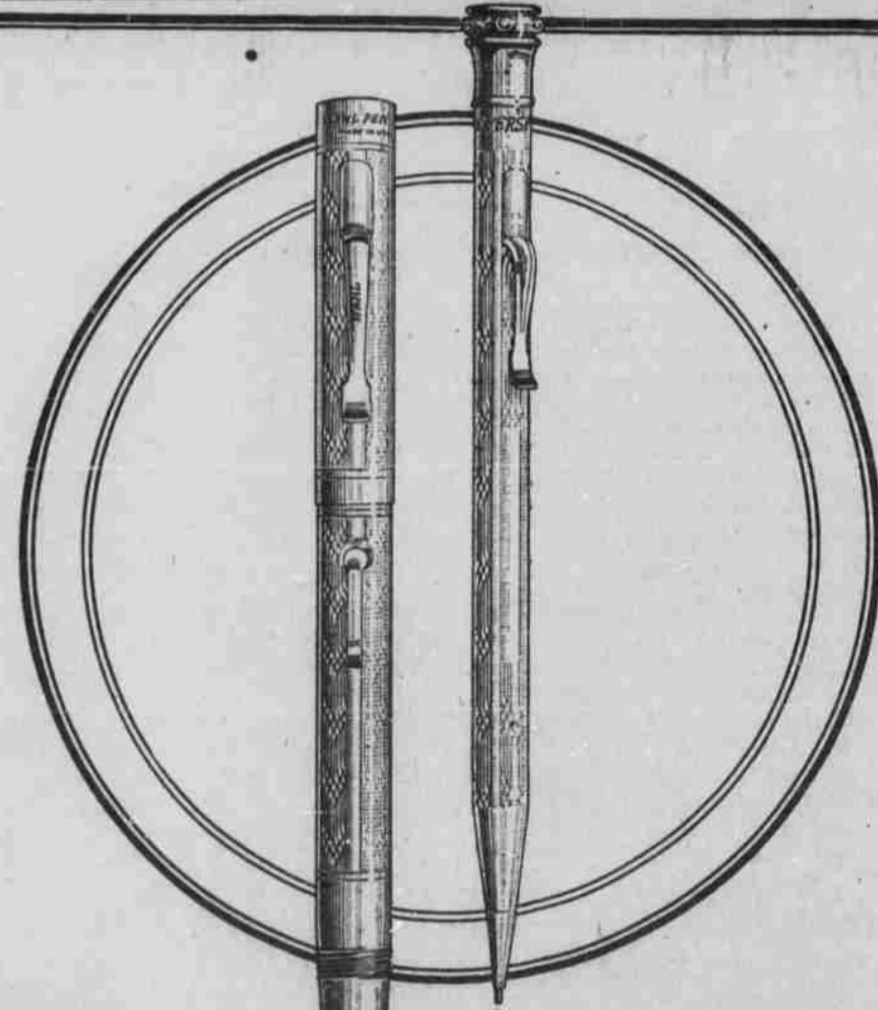

Or if your interests are along commercial lines, there is a broad opportunity for you here in the various departments of purchasing, accounting, distributing, selling and advertising
