"NEBRASKA THE BETTER"

Nebraska gained nation-wide recognition Saturday when its football team defeated the proud Illini at Urbana. Sport writers all over the country, with their eyes on the game, commented on the Husker victory. Although some alibied for Illinois, many of them gave Nebraska credit for a better team.

Walter Eckersall, who refereed the game, says in the Minneapolis Journal:

"The Huskers were prepared for anything in the second half, and the Illini probably had instructions to try anything. Illinois did complete some of the passes, but not enough to get within scoring distance. As the game was played there was little to choose between the two teams.

"Nebraska played a strong defensive game and stopped most of Grange's attempts, but the Cornhuskers had been instructed in a defense which stopped the Illinois ace. It was the first game Illinois has lost in the new stadium.

"Rhodes was the principal ball-carrier, but Dailey also did his share. Captain Weir played a strong game at tackle while Hutchinson at center was in the fray all of the time, defensively especially.

"Nebraska must be given credit. Their line played well and the secondary defense was one the alert constantly."

One of the Big Ten sports writers who was willing to give Nebraska full credit for having a good team was Warren Brown, of the Chicago Herald and Examiner. He says:

"Where Red Grange was more or less of a flop, one Rhodes, who came here heralded as quite a guy, lived up to the part, and supplied what thrills Red did not to the 30,000 fans.

"If it wasn't bad enough from the Illini viewpoint to have Red fail to get anywhere through his own locomotion, Dailey, the Nebraska fullback, supplied the rest of the crepe early in the very first period.

"Those pesky Nebraskans, fast chargers, sharp tacklers, didn't seem to realize that the mob was there to see Red Grange run. Every time he leaped to the attack he found one of the Weir brothers, Joe or Ed, clinging to the back of his neck or hanging on to his ankles or knees."

Scholz and Raish Hold Down Guard
Positions on Coach Bearg's Team

Clarence Raish

Walter Scholz

Raish and Scholz are the first-string guards on the Husker eleven which defeated Illinois Saturday. The pair worked well, and formed an important part of the line which surprised the Illini and put a damper on the efforts of Grange and Co. It was Walter Scholz who intercepted an Illinois pass and paved the way for the second Nebraska touch-down. Scholz played last year at the tackle position, and he is what is termed as a darn good tackle, too. Raish is one of the few heavyweights on the team. He tips the scales at around 210 pounds, and uses all his beef to the best advantage.

On the first team backfield besides Zust, was Beck at full, Marrow and Wyatt at halves. Many changes were made in the lines in order to give all the freshmen a chance to learn the play.

Thirty thousand live rabbits raised at the university, are in transit to Pennsylvania to repopulate the hills of that state. Each has a separate compartment on a fast train. Game wardens all over the state of Pennsylvania will receive the rabbits to be released there.

Coach Knute Rockne refuses to get excited over the way his charges swamped Baylor last Saturday. Knute says that "Notre Dame didn't show anything. We did not have the opposition expected."
