Considered calmly, and without the glamour that ordinarily surrounds it, the fraternity has many disadvantages as well as advantages.

In his social advantages only does the fraternity member have an advantage, though he may also gain some excellent friends in his group.

To wear the badge of some group means nothing. There are fraternity members who lack not only in the social graces but in intelligence and most of the other desirable attributes.

What are the usual qualifications for fraternity men? First, the ability to shake hands well; second, to be a reasonably good fellow.

One girl that we know in this university has had a plain pin—not a sorority pin—jeweled and made to look as much like a sorority pin as possible.

She might have remembered that there are now and there have been many students who have refused to join any fraternity, feeling that they would be happier with more independence.

Another girl who had been prominent in activities likewise declined a number of invitations to join.

These two were not freshmen when they had these opportunities, for freshmen are ordinarily completely sold on the fraternity hook.

All this is not meant as an attack on fraternities. Their advantages and disadvantages are about equal, with some perhaps stronger arguments for fraternity life.

THE SOPHOMORE SLUMP The freshman who manages to complete his first year of collegiate life without receiving an invitation to depart because of low grades, usually feels that the worst part of the ordeal is over, and perhaps he has some justification for this attitude.

The dangers lurking just within the office of any dean have left him slightly scared, but on the whole better for the experience, and he looks forward to the second year with a keen anticipation secure in his knowledge that "knows the ropes."

It is at this point that the trouble begins. The administrative offices have trouble enough to pour upon the heads of the passing freshmen, and some to spare.

The sophomore slump, which is a mighty barrier, and upon which entire organizations come to grief as well as individuals.

The sophomore slump is particularly the difficulty of fraternities and sororities. The new initiate is responsible. Stepping from a fear of low grades and a delayed initiation directly into the knowledge that his grades are above passing and he has become an active member, the sophomore suddenly becomes worthless or practically so.

The new initiate of a fraternity deserts the evening study table at his own risk, and his absence certifies a lower scholastic average for the fraternity as a whole.

The sophomore who belongs to no organization, has as much to fear through a false sense of security. He knows that a failure in a course will be disastrous and forgets that it may be very disagreeable.

This year the records in the administrative offices will again testify as to the certainty of the sophomore slump. The single individual can do very little to avert it but the senior members of organized groups can force a certain number of sophomores to save themselves.
