IT'S ONLY A GAME

We quote from an editorial in the Sunday World-Herald: "As the day for the annual gridiron clash between Nebraska and Notre Dame approaches, it is well to remember that this thing football, is after all, only a game."

"That's all it is, a game played by twenty-two to thirty youths. Surround it with burning loyalties to colleges, pay its coaches higher salaries than chancellors receive, train its warriors more rigorously than any Roman gladiators, devote more space in the newspapers to it than is given to the problems of world peace, draw huge crowds to its magnificent stadia than ever watched human conflict in any other field of endeavor, and football still remains a game."

If this be not true, if there is now no room for pure fun in football, if victory by this team or that outweighs achievement in anything else more particularly the function of universities, then it is time to do away with football and find in its place something that can be played and watched as a sport for the sport's sake alone.

Let us not lose the enjoyment in this spectacular game by making it a trade. Let us not kill the fun of football by taking it too seriously. Let us not damage the boys who play it, and the colleges that sponsor it, by forgetting, even for one brief moment, that football is, after all, one of the least important things of life."

The World-Herald states the case rather neatly. It is the cry for victory at all costs that has brought collegiate football into a rather unfavorable light and upon it some rather searching investigation. We do not mean by this that winning is not satisfying to that innate craving for superiority (even by proxy) that is in all men. No one, we believe, enjoys a football game more than we do. But somehow we cannot believe that "Nebraska can win, must and will win" and the like, win, must, will win" and the like, collegiate athletics. After all, somebody must lose, and the good sport should take his defeats as gracefully as his victories. No one school, be it our beloved Nebraska, fair Harvard, or any other dispensary of knowledge, has so great a claim to the favor of the gods as to be always successful.

ed to enter professional football. What of it? Is that any more important than any other college student's decision to leave school to make some money. "You'd think I was president of the United States," said Grange, "the way they flock after news of what I am going to do." Grange was too modest; few presidents ever got such hysterical adulation. Perhaps the prince of Wales, with his millions of flapper admirers, is a closer rival.

THE PERFECT WOMAN The "most perfect woman" in Denver University is to be selected by The Denver Clarion, student publication of that school. She is to be judged, it is said, not only on pulchritude, but also on intelligence and personality. The system to be used is not mentioned. Perhaps the most intelligent will be selected and the good looking ones chosen for a final elimination or vice versa. The final selection is to be made by outside critics, who, while they might be able judges of feminine charms, would hardly be able intelligently to criticize intellect or personality.

So it goes throughout the country, hither and yon. We pick co-eds constantly for beauty, intelligence, popularity, and various other qualities. And in few cases, probably, does the final selection mean much. At the University of Nebraska, we have three of these voting species: the honorary colonel, the queen of the military carnival, and the May queen. The second named is new to the school, but, like most of these things, it will probably persist. Some years ago the Cornhusker selected the five most beautiful girls in school, another year the most popular girls. The pictures were run in the year book. Because of considerable disagreement with the selections, the contests were dropped.

The women at this University some time ago rebelled at the drives and campaigns in which they were practically forced to participate on a sorority-contest basis. If they would now rebel against these individual contests they would still further improve their position. The results are seldom satisfactory to the majority of the students, the winners often take the contest too seriously and become conceited and the losers are left to weep alone or on some friendly shoulder. What has been accomplished?

Ten Years Ago

The question of delegates to represent Nebraska on the European peace mission, headed by Henry Ford, was the all-absorbing topic on the campus. Mr. Hixenbaugh received simultaneously with Chancellor Avery a personal invitation to accompany the party. Dr. Peichell, Y. M. M. C. A. secretary, spoke at the Y. W. C. A. vespers services on "Student Volunteers." This was the preliminary to the volunteer conference held at Fremont. Kansas planned to retrieve her downfall on the gridiron by taking both ends of the debate between the two universities. Deprived of victory when the Cornhusker team invaded Lawrence, they became all the more determined to out-argue their ancient rivals.

Right Use of Leisure "Guidance in the right use of leisure is vastly more important than vocational guidance." These are the words of Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University.

While Dr. Butler's statements applies to those who school days are past, the words are just as applicable to students.

Although the man or woman in a university is supposed to have somewhat of an idea of what is going on in the world outside the college walls only a small number of students do.

Right use of leisure does not mean poring over books. Still less does it mean gossiping with a group of the "choice spirits." It does not imply spending this leisure in a round of amusements. It may be all, but not any of these.

The right use of leisure has been a large factor in making most great men great.—Ohio State Lantern.

Keeps Your Hair Neat—Rich-looking and Orderly

If your hair lacks natural gloss and lustre, or is difficult to keep in place, it is very easy to give it that rich, glossy, refined and orderly appearance, so essential to well-groomed men. Just rub a little Glostora through your hair once or twice a week—or after shampooing, and your hair will then stay, each day, just as you comb it. Glostora softens the hair and makes it pliable. Then, even stubborn hair will stay in place of its own accord. It gives your hair that natural, rich, well-groomed effect, instead of leaving it stiff and artificial looking as waxy pastes and creams do. Glostora also keeps the scalp soft, and the hair healthy by restoring the natural oils from which the hair derives its health, life, gloss and lustre.
