THE ARTS COLLEGE The members of the faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences, with selected departmental representatives, are holding periodic discussions under the leadership of Dean James in an effort to determine the present status of the college, with the aim of improving that status.

Discussion by members of the Arts faculty may result in an evaluation of the college which will show need for change. The curriculum may be found wanting in organization, the almost free elective system may require some restriction, a need may be found for courses to supply a background to students coming with a background necessary for students, a need may be seen for special courses for "exceptional students," or a division between junior and senior college work may be required.

Whatever the results of these discussions, the principle of them is excellent. It shows that the faculty is ready to find weaknesses if they exist. It shows that the University of Nebraska faculty wishes to perpetuate, by adjustment to meet present conditions, the traditional high standing and high esteem which has characterized the Arts College of the past.

PROPAGANDA Advocates of the World Court in some form or other are now conducting one of the greatest campaigns on behalf of their project that we have ever seen. Editors of papers have been deluged with publicity material and information for editorials. Fresh copy arrives from a half dozen sources with each mail. Numerous meetings have been staged at which prominent speakers have outlined the advantages to be gained from participation in the Court. We have had two of these recently at Nebraska. A meeting, to be held at Princeton University next week-end at which representatives from various colleges and universities will attend, is expected to have considerable influence. That these representatives have been selected on no particular basis and have no right to interpret the sentiment of their schools, seems not to have occurred to the World Court enthusiasts. At the present time numerous college newspapers are conducting polls, having finally succumbed to the insistent demands of the propagandists. These polls will probably illy represent the opinion of students in general.

Most students favor the World Court, we believe. We are personally strongly in favor of it. But the methods by which the Court sympathizers have attempted to represent this sentiment without genuine justification seem to us unfair. Delegates from many colleges may express themselves (and by implication, their schools) in favor of the Court when the majority of student opinion, if given an opportunity for expression, would not favor it.

We predict that the World Court proposal will be accepted by Congress. One of the chief factors in this will be the excellent propaganda. The ease with which the people of this country may be swayed by a well-organized publicity campaign was demonstrated in the recent war. Sentiment in this country, until shortly before America entered the war, was fairly evenly divided, pro-German and pro-English. But by skillful publicity methods, we lost sight entirely of the real issues in the war (if there were any) and lashed ourselves into a frenzy over the published atrocities of the Huns, in Germany the same sort of thing was going on, and the people were believing the same stories of unspeakable cruelties by the allied troops. In this country the German, in a few short months, was changed in the public mind from a docile, industrious, and altogether desirable citizen, into a savage with all the characteristics of Alaric or Attila.

"Persuasion," says Walter Lippman, "has become a self-conscious art and a regular organ of popular government." It has. Like the constant dripping that wears away stone, the constant reiteration of some opinion will cause men who at first only opposed it to believe it. Propaganda rules the country. And to combat it, or at least to discern good from bad propaganda, we should keep this constantly in mind.

SPORTSMANSHIP Hamilton College of New York won a football game from Worcester October 10 by a 12-6 score. There was some doubt in one play whether a touchdown had been scored by Worcester or a touchback made. The referee held that it was a touchback. Later investigation of the rules by Hamilton students, however, showed that the referee had erred and that Worcester should have had another touchdown. The Executive Council of the Hamilton Undergraduate Association made an investigation and called upon the referee to explain the ruling. He admitted he had been wrong. So the Undergraduate Association sent this letter to the Worcester Association: "After due consideration and verification by the official concerned, the Hamilton College Undergraduate Association finds that an error in officiating was committed in the Worcester-Hamilton football game. A touchdown was ruled a touchback and we wish to have this corrected in the score which now stands 12 to 6 in Hamilton's favor, to read 12-12."

That is sportsmanship! ANONYMOUS The editor of The Nebraskan has received a letter signed "A Loyal Cornhusker," in which he is taken to task for criticizing the excess of enthusiasm that preceded the Notre Dame game. The correspondent, however, seems not to value his opinions sufficiently to sign his name, and, in keeping with our rule, we shall not publish the letter. If the writer will make his identity known and agree to sign his name or initials, we shall not only be willing but most pleased to print his letter.
