SELF-EDUCATION

It has been said that, while the college cannot do so, the university assumes that its students are intellectually interested and can be treated accordingly. Whether or not we believe that students are so interested in the business of the institution that they can be so considered by the university, is a question. The fact remains, however, that in most respects the assumption is made. A great deal of individual responsibility rests on the undergraduate as a result.

One respect in which the student rises or falls on his own efforts is that of independent study. So many undergraduates have been helped along in high school by supervised study and by indulgent teachers that habits of independent study are not formed when they reach the university. Yet the University expects that students know how to study.

A background of information and mental development is assumed by the University. With the almost-free elective system confronting him, the student must have some appreciation of the relative value of the courses and the proper unification and blending together of subjects to form a University course, or his work is likely to mean nothing to him. Lacking this background, the student must provide it for himself. Being ignorant of the value of or the way to elect a worthwhile and educative course of study, the student will have to read and seek advice until he gets it. The University expects this of the individual.

It is expected, also, that the individual is able to intelligently distribute his efforts between the many activities which make demands upon him. It requires that the individual shall be able to discriminate between what parts of life in a university community are good and what parts are bad. Clubs, fraternities, organizations, athletics, publications, and society—all of these offer themselves as means of activity. The University expects the individual to intelligently discriminate so that the sanest balance is got between studies and campus activity not directly to do for him, and with its highest connected with studies.

Taking these items, collectively, with others not mentioned here, we may conclude that the University expects that the student will form some conception as to what his entire life here is to mean, what it is to do for him, and what its highest possibilities for permanent enjoyment and value are. It expects that on the basis of such a conception the student will conduct himself, plan his activities, and elect his courses. The responsibility resting on the undergraduate would appear tremendous; yet how often it is not shouldered, and with what results!

SUPPORT

In another part of today's paper will be found an article taken from The Christian Science Monitor. We re-print it because of the striking resemblance in remedy it suggests for the reform of football and the suggestions made by us in an editorial recently.

"UNCIVILIZED TREATMENT" From some unknown source at the University of Notre Dame we have received the following editorial entitled "Uncivilized Treatment" which was taken from the Notre Dame Scholastic:

If recent reports are true, it must be the style in Lincoln, Nebraska, to grossly insult one's guests.....in cities where the majority of the inhabitants are civilized it is not.

The treatment accorded the Notre Dame guests on Thanksgiving is mysterious; it can best be accounted for by presuming that certain residents of a certain state have been left behind in the progress of civilization, that they have somehow become isolated from the rest of mankind and grown up in ignorance of commonly accepted standards of courtesy.

Some display of collegiate enthusiasm can be excused as resulting from over-heated brains.....but not these. "Roughneck Irish" placards, outrageous "entertainment" between halves of the game and similar things cannot easily be forgotten.

With the editorial writer of the South Bend News-Times we believe that the case demands an apology from the mayor of Lincoln and the president of the University of Nebraska.

Writing on the margin, our unknown informant comments: "It looks nice for we Nebr. fellows at Notre Dame," and "I dare you to re-print this." Passing over the errors in grammar as of little consequence, we wish to declare our perfect willingness to re-print the editorial. Our only reason for not wishing to was because of the dare. The editorial, of course, is bosh; and it serves to strengthen our suspicion that Notre Dame was seeking an excuse to break relations with Nebraska because the Huskers were too tough.

LOCK THE DOORS

Walter Anderson, chief of detectives of the Lincoln police force, has suggested to fraternities that they post a watchman each night to prevent the recurrence of fraternity house robberies. Chief Johnstone believes that this would do little good because of the tendency of the watchman to sleep. He suggests that the fraternities try locking their doors.

Once started, the robbing of the fraternity houses seems to become very popular, as students have learned in the past few years. We therefore suggest that they take some method of precaution, if the members are not to wake some morning sans clothes, sans watch, sans everything.

Twenty Years Ago

At a mass meeting of the women of the three upper classes, a University Girls' Club was organized. The purpose of the club was to make college life more pleasant for the freshmen women.

Work began on the big athletic event of mid-winter. The Charter Day athletic program because of more than ordinary importance to the University student. Dr. Clapp called a meeting in the Armory to decide what other work could be added profitably.

The new Physics building was sufficiently completed to allow the classes in Physics to meet in the large lecture room on the second floor. The change from the poorly lighted rooms which had been used was most welcome and better results were expected in the new location.

"Our pioneering work has just begun"

RECENTLY some one said to a prominent official of the Bell System:

"Your pioneering work is done. You have created a system that makes a neighborhood of the nation."

The executive replied: "Our pioneering work has just begun. Each day brings new problems, new discoveries, new developments, all calling for broader-vised handling on a larger scale than ever before. If I were a young man again in years, I would choose the telephone business for my life work even more quickly than I did before."
