WORLD COMMENTS ON STUDENT VIEWS

New York Paper Suggests a Study Be Made of the American College of Today

NEW YORK—The Morning World recently carried the following editorial on the recent student movements:

"It is the Student Council which advocates dividing Harvard into six colleges, on the style of an English university, and this fact strikes us as interesting. Here again is criticism of our educational system; and here again it is not the regents, the faculty, or the alumni who are demanding change, but the students."

"In the past few months these signs of student dissatisfaction with things as they are have been numerous, and they have come from here, there and everywhere. To begin with, there have been frequent 'free-speech' cases. Then, at Princeton and Yale there have been wrangles over compulsory chapel. At Dartmouth there was a survey, made by students at the request of the authorities, and culminating a report which must have given orthodox educators occasion for thought, if not for alarm. There have been various student attacks against organized football, one by the Harvard Crimson, another by a group of student editors who published suggestions for reducing the size of a bloated sport. On an adolescent scale, there was the recent flurry in the College of the City of New York over military training. And, as a most significant phenomenon, there is a publication, The New Student, which is devoted to telling the goings-on of various new undergraduate movements.

"What does all this mean? One is at a loss to say. The thing goes on, but so far it seems to have a sort of outlaw status: nobody seems to have taken the trouble to tabulate its symptoms, plot its curve, and show where it is leading. Why doesn't somebody tackle the job of showing us where? What we need is a book on the subject, tracing the movement from its beginning and comparing the American college of to-day, in the light of what has already transpired, with the American college of ten years ago."

Nine-Year-Old Youth Has Vocabulary As Large As William Shakespeare Had

William Shakespeare, lauded among writers for the extent of his vocabulary, is equalled, in the number of words used by the average 9-year-old boy of the American city of today. Startling, maybe, but true, according to Prof. J. V. Breitwelser of the University of California. Professor Breitwieser explains his statement by pointing out that the present city-bred boy's vocabulary is equal in extent but not in kind to that of the "immortal bard."

"It is easy to see why I say this," Dr. Breitwieser explained. "Just stop for a moment and consider the things a modern boy comes in contact with. First, there is the automobile, an extra hundred words or more there; the radio, another hundred or two. And I can go on—elevators, electricity, street cars, each adding its own descriptive vocabulary of another hundred or so words."

Asked if this boy, with his extensive vocabulary and different mode of life, was equipped with a larger and more active brain than his ancestors, Dr. Breitwieser answered "No," or possibly, "Very slightly more." The difference now is that the city-bred 9-year-old boy is forced to use his equipment as much or more every day than did a matured adult of Shakespeare's time.

Memorial Service For James T. Lees

a harbor wall Banished darkness. Strange crafts, both large and small. Were moving to realms only spirits see.

You passed within the silence above our ken. In vain we waited, yearning for your return, Bowed by the weight of loneliness all men. Must feel. Now wisely, we turn from tears that burn To this noble tree. Here at your bidding then, We strew the precious contents of this urn. Doctor Stuff is a member of the committee in charge of the arrangements for the memorial services, of which Professor Robert H. Wolcott is chairman.

Professor Lees was a member of the faculty at Nebraska for thirty years, head of the Greek department, member of the Athletic board, a provost, and held many other positions of great importance on the campus. He died February 3, 1926, at Coronado, California.
