TRACTORS TESTED BY AG ENGINEERS

State Law Compels Manufacturers To Have Machines Studied by University Department

An almost unknown law in the state of Nebraska is the Tractor Testing law. Although little known, its benefits are beginning to be felt by most of the farmers of the state. This law compels all gasoline tractor manufacturers to have all tractors tested thoroughly by the Agricultural Engineering Department of the University of Nebraska before they can be sold in the state.

Since 1920, 126 tractors have been tested. Of this number, sixty-eight appeared the first year, sixty-five of which were tested. Only 15.4 per cent of those tested passed the inspection. This test lasts from thirty to seventy hours and is very thorough and rigid. Fourteen machines appeared in 1921, five in 1922, fourteen in 1923, ten in 1925, and twenty-five so far this year. During 1924 and 1925 all tractors that were tested passed. This shows the value of the proposition, and that the farmers of the state are now assured of a machine that will come up to specifications that are advertised.

Complete Record Kept
During the tests of the draw-bar and pulley, a complete record is kept at all times. This record is later filed with the Agricultural Engineering Department office. A copy is also furnished the Nebraska State Railway Commission. These records are kept open to the public at all times.

The testing has become so efficient and thorough that the plant is now known all over the world and many inquiries are received by the Agricultural Engineering department concerning these tests. These inquiries are from all over the United States and many are received from foreign countries. Foreign engineers have been known to make special trips from Chicago to inspect the tractor testing laboratories of the University, and to study the laws that govern the experiments along this line.

Dairy Judging Team Leaves for Detroit

The Dairy Products Judging team, under the direction of Dr. P. A. Downs, will leave Sunday, October 3, for Detroit, where they will take part in the National Dairy Show, being held at that city starting October 6.

The team will spend two days in Chicago. They will work with the Federal Butter Inspector of that city and the manager of the Wisconsin Cheese Producers Federation. Donald Ray and Harold Frost will go with Dr. Downs, and they will be joined at Detroit by Anton Frolik and Clarence Bartlett, who are at this time with the Dairy Stock Judging team.

Davis Returns from Chicago Conference

Prof. H. P. Davis, head of the dairy department of the College of Agriculture, has returned from Chicago where he attended a conference of Dairy Department heads. This conference was for the purpose of establishing open or public formulas for the proper dairy cattle feeds.

Among the prominent dairy men that were present at this conference were Professors T. M. Olson of the South Dakota Agricultural College, C. W. Holdaway of the Virginia Polytechnical Institute, E. S. Savage and L. A. Maynard of Cornell University.

The final organization will be accomplished at a meeting called for October 7 at the National Dairy Show, which is being held at Detroit.
