evidence as it appeals to that supreme thing—intelligence. Work in science is carried on on the basis of evidence. Why should we not demand that the church produce evidence? Intelligence is that which a man applies when he enters the past and applies all of himself laboratory with knowledge of the to learn new facts. The same method should be successful in dealing with religion. I am willing to apply intelligence wheresoever it may lead me.

Mr. Palmer opened his discussion by pointing out that the present tendency was to find a short-cut to "We are a nation of people hunting knowledge, power and happiness. short-cuts," he declared. He then referred to advertisements which offer a magical way to do something quickly and pointed out that similar tendencies of people were prevalent in politics and religion.

"We Demand Certainty"
"With the breakdown of the old religious faiths," he said, "has come a feeling of uncertainty which humanity as a whole extremely dislikes. We demand certainty. We are in-paper. The five large state dailies from Omaha and Lincoln are used as objects of study in this regard.

This study, which places emphasis on quantitative, rather than qualitative journalism, and the purpose of which is to supplement theoretical work in actual handling of news as printed, has assured the following forms up to the present time: an assignment dealing with the percentage of news and advertising in various papers; analysis of papers to find the different kinds of editorial comment and the space devoted to each; determination of the place of origin of the news, such as foreign, state or local; and, a week's study of papers to discover the best stories as regards news technique.

Two immediate goals of the Journalism Department are the exhibit of foreign publications and the exhibit of representative American publications, both of which will be used in the study of various courses.

In addition to the rapidly increasing contents of the reading room, the students also have access to a wealth of material in the Journalism Library, located in the School of Journalism office, which contains from 300 to 400 books on subjects ranging from fiction to heavier reading concerning the significance and philosophy of journalism. These books have been catalogued in accordance with the standard cataloguing system used in the Main Library.

him by Mr. Harrison, compared it to the English game of Rugby and was surprised to find so much similarity. The values of the touchdowns, try for point and field goal are relatively the same, although called by different names.

The time of the visitors was very limited and they were unable to examine the workings of the University very closely, but seemed very favorably impressed with those things which they were able to see.
