Industrial Authority Believes People Are Much the Same the World Over

"I have come out of living in England, China and America with one thing firmly impressed upon me—men and women, whether they be British, Chinese, French, American, are much the same the world over only they don't know it. They do not have a common trust and appreciation of one another which will rise above political disturbances—such as the present Mexican and Chinese situations—and build for world peace."
 In this way Miss Agatha Harrison, formerly Y. W. C. A. industrial secretary in China, who is brought to Lincoln by the University Y. W. C. A. in preparation for the Grace Coppock memorial drive, summed up the causes for friction in international affairs, in an interview for The Daily Nebraskan.

Miss Harrison is a very real person. She speaks quick close clipped syllables, without a trace of the British drawl with which Americans characterize English people. One might indeed have taken her for an American, and thus she proved her point—people the world over are very much alike.
 Six years ago Miss Harrison was called to China to study industrial conditions there. She left the London College of Economics, which is a department of the University of London feeling very small and very much alone. She was rushed through the United States at what seemed to her a terrific speed. She spent less than a day in most of the cities in which she stopped at all. In that brief space of time she met women of the leisure class, college girls and working girls all held together by one bond, the Y. W. C. A. When she entered America she was very homesick for England but when she left this country for China she was just as homesick for America.

"I have friends in every city in which I stopped; this would not be possible in England," Miss Harrison laughed.

"Do you know, I think our houses are typical of our countries. In England you see a house with a garden around it—you call it a yard but I call it a garden—and around that is a fence with a gate in it which separates you from the next house. Here you don't have fences; you can look right into your neighbor's room. You don't pull down your shades."

"You can't," she hastened to add, "in a pioneering country build a house and then sit down and wait for your neighbor to call upon you. You come out to meet us. In England we have our houses with their gardens and fences which shut out the world, but after you get inside and know us you will find that the heart of a Britisher is just the same as the heart of an American."

"Six years ago I did not know anything about the Y. W. C. A. and did not have much faith in the ability of my association to do anything about the industrial condition in any country. Today I can see no other association of women which can establish the understanding that is necessary between nations in the building of world peace."

 That a new day has come, a new day that requires that nations shall deal more justly with one another and that the strong shall not take advantage of the weak, was declared by Mr. Libby to be the result of the awakening of American public opinion which has protested against the conduct of the state department in the present situation.

The Orpheum Theater opens its doors next Monday night, Feb. 7, with a week's engagement of the film "Beau Geste" from the novel of the same name by Major Percival C. Wren, directed by Herbert Brenon. "Beau Geste" is a story of the French Foreign Legion and opens with a scene of a French battalion approaching a desert fort in the Sahara. The battalion's trumpeter sounds his salute, the major fires a shot from his pistol but there is no answering signal from the fort. Although the soldiers with rifles leveled can be seen standing in the embrasures of the fort, there is no response. Then the close-ups reveal that every man at his post is dead! The picture then flashes back to the beginning of the story of the three Geste boys, Michael (Beau), Digby and John in their English home. The story takes them through childhood and finally to the adult period. When their aunt loses a fabulously valuable sapphire, they each take the blame and disappear, meeting again in the French Foreign Legion. Herbert Brenon has so cleverly weaved the mystery of the stolen jewel throughout the story it is safe to venture that not one of the audience will guess the solution until it is revealed at the end.

 Ronald Colman, Neil Hamilton and Ralph Forbes as the three brothers have created characters in this film that will be long remembered. Other roles of importance are portrayed by Noah Berry, Alice Joyce, Mary Brian, William Powell, Norman Trevor, Victor McLaglan and Donald Stuart.
 Special musical score written by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld is rendered by the company's own traveling symphony orchestra.—Adv.
