Acting-Chancellor Burnett Opens Traditional Charter Day Program

The traditional Charter Day program started last evening with chimes of the historic University bell. At regular intervals all during the evening the old bell rang out to the old graduates who remembered of being called to chapel by the staccato stroke of the memorable bell.

Dean E. A. Burnett, acting Chancellor of the University of Nebraska, began the program of the evening with a greeting to the Chancellor. "To Chancellor and Mrs. Avery, who are listening in at San Diego, California, the University of Nebraska extends its greeting and sends a message of goodwill. We know that your years of service richly entitle you to rest, but we are jealous lest the sunny clime of California wean you too quickly from the memory of the home folks who bid you God speed and a quick recovery."

Dean Burnett sent greetings on this 58th Charter Day to those former students who were listening in tonight, telling how the "University of today may be changed in its physical appearance but not much in its ideals." He went on to say that "From a small college we have grown to be a great University with ten separate colleges; with two secondary agricultural schools, with an agricultural experiment station having four branches, with a University Extension Department offering many college courses, and with a department of agricultural extension reaching many thousands of people in rural homes."

The request of Dean Burnett "to rekindle your interest in the University of Nebraska and your love for the men and women whom you knew in student days, to send your children to us for their education" so that

Former Lincoln Pastor Attacks
Attitude of Some Students
Toward Professors

"Some students look upon new professors with eyes like dead codfish," declared Rev. John Andrew Holmes, former pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, in his talk on "Liking Certain Classes of People" as the vesper service yesterday evening.

The speaker told the group that very often there are students who are determined to dislike the incoming instructor and as a result the professor is not at ease and is not able to give his best to the class. The prejudiced student receives no good from a class in which he is constantly finding fault and the remainder of the students are affected in a subconscious way.

"We should like people as far as our Christian love allows us to," Reverend Holmes concluded. "There are two commandments in the Bible, one bidding us love God and the other asking us to love our neighbor. This does not mean that we should be infatuated with our neighbor but rather we should enter into spiritual sympathy with everybody."

Geraldine Fleming had charge of the service. A vocal solo by Ruby Sandstead furnished the musical program of the evening.

Professor White Explains Methods Of Presenting Arguments In Debate

Continuing the informal series of talks on debating, for those considering the subject in high schools of Nebraska, Prof. H. A. White, president of the Nebraska High School Debating League, explained certain methods of presenting an argument over the University radio station yesterday afternoon.

"All speaking," Professor White began, "is an attempt to communicate ideas and emotions to others. Fundamentally, the process is one of give and take between the speaker and the auditor. We are often hindered by the notion that our audience know a great deal about the subject under consideration. That the average person who thinks of the questions of public interest will be more or less familiar with the rudiments of our subject for debate is usually true. Yet knowledge will be somewhat confused and rudimentary in many instances. The speaker therefore cannot afford to take too much for granted since a large part of the hearers may know little, and sometimes may care less about the topic he has chosen to discuss."

The speaker said that it is therefore important that every point, with its supporting evidence, must be brought into the full light of infor-

THREE CLASS PRESIDENTS ARE ELECTED

Marti Easily Wins Ivy Day
Orator; Students Decide
To Keep Tradition

BALLOT BOX UNOPENED

Senior President Vote Left
Uncounted When Council
Suspects "Stuffing"

Robert Du Bois, '28, Cheyenne, Wyo., was elected junior class president; William Mentzer, '29, Cheyenne, Wyo., sophomore president; and Harold Trumble, '30, Cambridge freshman president, at the second semester elections held yesterday in the Temple lobby. Lloyd Marti, '27, Lincoln, was chosen Ivy Day Orator, after that tradition was favored by the student vote.

The Ivy Day Orator will remain as a part of the traditional Ivy Day ceremonies according to the 486 vote cast for the retention of the speaker against 275 for the elimination.

Due to an obvious "stuffing" of the ballot box no senior class president was elected. Members of the Student Council detected several over-energetic electioneers voting several times for one candidate.

Results

Junior Class President
Robert Dubois	95
Archie Storms	90
E. Dale Dickson	22
Sophomore Class President
William Mentzer	139
Scattered	7
Freshman Class President
Harold Trumble	141
Elmer Coates	133
Jane Glennon	41
Ivy Day Orator
Lloyd Marti	over 400
W. F. Jones Jr.	32
Robert Tynan	20

The Student Council members felt that they had sufficient proof of unfairness in regard to the casting of these ballots to warrant the holding of another election. This election will be held next Tuesday in the Temple Lobby.

The Student Council will meet this afternoon to make definite rules regarding the next election.

"Only two reasons can explain the situation," explained Glenn Buck, president of the Student Council, following the counting of the votes. "Either extra ballots were printed by outside parties, or members of the Student Council working behind the desk allowed extra ballots to be distributed to the voters."

More than fifteen hundred votes were polled for the three class presidents and the Ivy Day Orator, according to the official Council count. This is an exceptionally large number for a mid-term election.

Nebraska School Systems Of The Past Reviewed By Professor Reed

"Nebraska's Coat of Many Colors", uniting became a new corporation for all high school purposes.

"From the beginning of statehood, Nebraska has recognized that a different organization is desirable for districts with high school departments from that of the little rural school.

"The first and most successful attempt to increase the size of the school unit in Nebraska has been the movement for free high school education. In response to a demand for equalizing educational opportunities for Nebraska boys and girls, the legislature, in 1895, passed the first free high school act.

"In 1907 the Legislature passed the first successful free attendance act. It accepted the principle that every school district is responsible for the education of the common schools, including high school education, all of the children between the ages of 5 and 21. Accordingly districts were held to be responsible for the tuition, at rates from time to time fixed by law, for all grades from 9 to 12 not provided locally. The general principle is still in force. Nebraska's free-attendance law accounts in part for the remarkable attendance in her high schools."
