Museum Is Moved Into Morrill Hall; Occupies Basement and First Floor

When the Nebraska State Museum is completely established in Morrill Hall, this will be the third building which it has occupied in the course of its history. In 1888, when Nebraska Hall was built, space was reserved on the second and third floors for the Museum. For several years the Museum did not have much material, but consisted chiefly of bare floors and empty cases. As late as 1891 the principal collections were: invertebrate fossils secured by Dr. Samuel Aughey and Dr. Lewis E. Hicks, a set of Permian fossils from Gage county, a few alcoholic specimens and certain excellent dissections prepared by Dr. J. S. Kingsley and his students; and a set of Nebraska birds secured and mounted by Prof. Lawrence Bruner, which was plainly the outstanding exhibit. In 1891 Prof. E. H. Barbour came to the Museum, although not formally appointed as Director until 1893. Considerable collecting was done in 1891-92-93, and with the encouragement given to paleontological research by the liberal financial support of Charles H. Morrill, beginning in 1893, a large amount of material was acquired. By the end of 1893 the Museum was so congested and over loaded that some of the specimens had to be boxed and stored. Many of these have stood unopened ever since then. Plans for a new museum were drafted, ground was broken February 1907, and the building was formally opened to the public February 14, 1908. This four-story brick building, which the Museum has occupied until now, when it is being moved into Morrill Hall, is only a portion of the building as originally planned, as the architect's plans called for a much larger building, which was to have been built by units as growth demanded. It was planned to house not only the Museum but the department of Geology and Geography, the (Continued from Page One.) been arranged: Professor K. M. Arndt will speak on "Banking" at the first monthly luncheon, Thursday, March 3. The following week trips will be made to the commercial banks, investment houses and saving banks. A discussion on banking will be held at the regular business meeting March 16. The next month on Thursday, April 7, Prof. I. C. Blood will talk on "Advertising and Demand Creation," which will be followed by an address on "Buying and Store Control," by Prof. O. R. Martin. During the week of April 10-16 trips will be made to newspapers, printers and department stores, thus giving the students an opportunity to gain an insight into advertising, management, accounting, purchase and control of retail stores. Wednesday, April 20, retailing will be discussed. "Industrials" will be the subject of a speech by Mr. F. E. Coatsworth. Lincoln, at the monthly luncheon Thursday May 5. The week of May 8-14 will include trips to Beatrice Creamery, Gooch Mill, Havelock Cusps, Gillen-Boney Candy Co., Cushman Motor Works, and the Queen Incubator Co. The semester program will be concluded at a business meeting Wednesday May 18 at which "Industrials" will again be discussed.

ENGINEERING CLUB WILL GIVE DINNER

Invitation Extended to University Students to Attend Dinner And Meeting March 1 The Engineers' Club of Lincoln has extended an invitation to students, especially those in the Engineering College, to attend a dinner and meeting at the Grand Hotel, Tuesday evening, March 1. The dinner will be at 6:15 and the meeting at 7:45. Colonel Paul Doty of St. Paul, Minnesota, will speak on "Public Relations of Engineers." Colonel Doty has had wide experience in the management of Public Utilities, particularly large gas and electric light companies. He is chairman of the Minnesota State Board of Registration for Engineers and other societies. Students are urged to take advantage of this opportunity to hear Colonel Doty, who is prominent in engineering circles. Those who wish to attend the dinner can make reservations by calling Professor A. A. Luebs, M. E. 101. Those who wish to attend the meeting, can come to the Grand Hotel at 7:45.

Daily Nebraskan Inquiring Reporter Every day he asks a question from different students picked at random on the campus.

Today's Question: What type of student-life section would you like to find in this year's Cornhusker? Where Asked: Social Sciences. Bernice Trimble, Selden, Kansas, Bus. Ad. '29. "I'd like to see more snapshots." Enos Heller, Hebron, Bus. Ad. '28. "I think a combination of cartoons and stories would be most interesting." Dorothy Mercer, Lincoln, Ag. College '28. "There's never enough about Ag. College students. Why can't they have a little more space?" Lewis Armstrong, Phillipsburg, Kansas, A. and S., '28. "It seems to me that it should be as informal as possible, for then the students will appreciate it more." Harold Coates, North Platte, Pre-law, '29. "I would like to see jokes and stories printed about the students, also plenty of interesting snapshots." Pauline Bilon, Columbus, Arts and Sciences, '29. "Why not a flash-light picture of the Silver Moon at about ten in the morning?" Ralph Lancaster, Kearney, Bus. Ad. '29. "Lots of pictures, among them one of Social Sciences with all the student population sitting in the sun."

MANY WILL GO TO CONFERENCE

About Thirty-five University Women Expected to Attend Meetings At Wesleyan About thirty-five women from the University of Nebraska Y. W. C. Curiously Marked Small Yellow Stone Is Great Museum Mystery

Baffling in the extreme is the determination of the origin and use of a small yellowish stone curiously marked which E. E. Blackman, curator of the Nebraska State Historical Society, found in the cases of the State Historical Society museum in 1917 after he had been absent for seven years. No one seems to know from where it came or who gave it to the collection. According to Mr. Blackman the knowledge of where it was found and in what condition will be invaluable in unraveling the mystery of its history and use. Crawling up the side of the oval stone is to all appearances a life size crayfish realistically chiseled in the stone. Different sections of the body are quite distinct and show keen observation on the part of the ancient sculptor. Marks show where the tail and head have been broken off. Black hieroglyphics resembling shorthand and covering both sides of the yellow-brown stone are still more intriguing. To show this more clearly Mr. Blackman produced a magnifying glass under which were seen interesting-looking curves, lines, and dashes. On one side the figure of a horse, until then unnoticed by Mr. Blackman, was discovered. Still secret is the use of the relic. Since ancients used red hematite to color their cheeks, that this stone was used to grind the solid paint to powder is highly probable. However the crayfish on the side hints that it might have been used for a totem or some other form of idol. Similar stones were employed in tanning hides. Some squaw of high rank might have rubbed skins smooth with this mysterious little stone. In trying to unravel this mystery, Mr. Blackman has twice written to the University of Copenhagen in Sweden, recognized as the highest authority on archeology and ancient man with no results. At present it is merely an interesting object for speculation. "I am always hoping," ended Mr. Blackman, "to find out who donated this and where it was found. Till then it will without doubt remain the museum's greatest mystery."

Registration is still open for attendance at the conference. Any women interested are requested to see Miss Erma Appleby, Y. W. C. A. secretary as soon as possible. There is a small registration fee of twenty-five cents as it is hoped to make the conference self supporting.

Oklahoma U. Needs New Library

Norman, Feb. 23.—(Special)—Lack of adequate library facilities is one of the greatest handicaps the University of Oklahoma is facing in the education of the young men and women of the state, President W. B. Bizzell said today. The present library building has reading room space to accommodate at one time only about 200 of the 5,000 students of the University, and the number of volumes in the library is far below that of neighboring state universities. A new library building is the first structure asked for on Doctor Bizzell's budget which is up for consideration before the legislature. If the appropriation is secured, the building will be constructed directly south of the present Administration building, and will be the head of the new south oval which eventually will extend to the southern limits of the campus. Doctor Bizzell hopes to devote the south half of two floors to general reading rooms for students, with the reference books and volumes in most demand conveniently placed. The building will contain four stories of stack rooms, with seminar rooms and reading rooms for graduate students on the north. The

Talks of eating at the Central Cafe

Central Cafe At or about noon most persons eat more or less food. Some call it "lunch" or "luncheon" and eat sparingly. Others call it "dinner" and make it the principal meal of their day. Just what you will call this meal eaten near midday, or how much you should eat, depends on you. Persons whose work is largely mental and who get little physical exercise, very often discover that a light meal is best at this time. But no rigid rule can be established. It is a matter for you, or you and your doctor, to decide. In former "talks of eating at the Central Cafe" the regular printed menu card has been fairly well described; so we need not waste time on it now. But twice each day a mimeographed menu is wire-clipped to the regular card—one about 11:30 a. m. for "Dinner" and one about 5:00 p. m. for "Supper."

This mimeographed menu in considerable measure is different from meal to meal and from day to day. It contains usually about 70 items covering: Soup, Fish, Entrees, Roasts, Cold Meats, Relishes, Salads, and Desserts.

The soup listed in this mimeographed menu is of a different kind each day and the Central Cafe chef and his assistants pride themselves on making it just a wee bit better and tastier than the canned soups so widely advertised. A bowl of this soup with crackers, 15 cents; but if taken with a meat order, 10 cents. (To be continued) 1325 P
