Speaker For Arts Meeting Wins Prizes

Ernest L. Blumenschein, painter, of Taos, New Mexico, will be one of the principal speakers at the western convention of the American Federation of Arts, which will be held in Lincoln. Blumenschein was born in Pittsburgh, the son of W. L. Blumenschein, the composer and chorus conductor. He received his art education at New York and Paris and acquired reputation early as one of America's best illustrators.

When he was 43 years old he was able to give up commercial art and devote himself entirely to painting. His paintings have won ten awards, the highest of these being the silver medal at the Sesqui-centennial at Philadelphia, which was awarded him in a competition with nearly 2,000 painters in the United States.

He is one of the foremost painters in the Taos school of painting which is regarded as one of the most significant art movements in the history of American painting. The Taos country in New Mexico offers an abundance of native material and the "Taos School" has applied new methods of interpretation to these essentially American subjects.

Mr. Casteel, who is now employed by the United States public health service, in sending the Filaria slides, has written that he has available some very good studies of Malaria, and will send slides of these if they are desired. Dr. Wolcott has notified him that these will be very acceptable, as the collection of slides of this kind here is unsatisfactory both from the standpoint of number and variety.

Fast Pace Led by Grandparents Was Cause of Much Unfavorable Comment

By Dorothy Natt
"Among the many evils resulting from the fast spirit of the age, is its effect upon our schools. Scholars cannot spend time to study and expect teachers to do it for them."

Upon reading the above sentences modern youth marks them as one of the tiresome tirades which conservative older folk are always making about this generation. The complaint is heard frequently, today, that students are not seriously interested in their school work, so the quoted statement sounds typical of 1927. But shockingly enough, it happens that this was not written about the present young people, who are supposed to be living such a swift pace, but about their grandparents, who it seems, were not so slow themselves. The quotation is taken from a school report from a small New Hampshire town, under date of 1856.

Students of the present day are often made to feel, by both parents and the school, that they are quite the worst edition of the human race yet published. But another report in this survey shows that our be-

Skeleton Is Subject For Recent Work

Homer B. Latimer, instructor in the department of zoology here until last year, has recently published a paper entitled, "The Post-Natal Growth of the Chicken Skeleton," which is largely based on experiments conducted in the biology laboratories of the University of Nebraska.

Professor Latimer took his A. B. degree at the University of Minnesota in 1907, and his master's there in 1908. His term of instruction here began in 1916. The work on chicken skeletons was begun during his last few summer vacations at Minnesota and was completed here. The paper is dated September, 1927, and contains a number of diagrams and illustrations.

Professor Latimer has made many of his observations upon oven-dried skeletons, which he prepared by scraping the bones as clean as possible, and then drying in an oven.

The studies were made over the whole period of growth of the fowl, and covered both sexes. It was found that the newly hatched chick loses 70 per cent of the weight of (Continued on Page 2)
