

Lobbying By "Al"

I wrote to a friend in Hollywood the other day and asked him why Greta Garbo was so popular. He answered, "Well, Al, I don't know. But since you ask, I would call her America's Suppressed Desire." — whatever that means.

During the last six months 5970 girls have exhausted their patience and their financial resources, waiting for a "break" in the magic empire of our country, the studios of Hollywood. Though there were undoubtedly many screen "gems" (in the rough) among their ranks, they were not "found." Foolish girls. They spent six months (some of them will probably spend six months more) and much money in a vain attempt to realize an ambition that almost all persons have or have had some time in the past. If you would try your luck, try the advice of a well known director. "Take your savings" he says, "and make a hundred foot trial." That means buy a hundred feet of film, or more if you can afford it, and hire a camera man to "shoot" you in the various poses which you feel will show your form and ability to the best advantage. When the directors want a certain type, rather than go out on the lot and choose from the extras that roam there, they make their selections from these trial shots. Pretty good advice at that.

After much figuring, I believe that I have solved a problem that has been bothering theatre owners for a long time. The problem of moving from the center of a row without molesting or obstructing the view of other patrons. Have every seat equipped with an electric button.

When the patron desires to leave, he presses the button and the seat automatically lowers itself into the basement which is fixed like a subway.

All that remains is for some engineer to draft blue prints of a feasible mechanism.—Wait a minute. That wouldn't work in Lincoln. For it is the custom of patrons here to move down four or five rows, when seats there are vacated.

Eight or ten people all arriving below at the same time, would undoubtedly dispute with each other the right to occupy the vacant seats and such verbal clashes would be more distracting than someone stepping on your toes or batting the back of your head with their elbow.

Then, too, the kids would ride up and down just for the fun of it, which would run up a tremendous bill for electricity. And couples, when holding hands, might accidentally press the button, lowering one or the other downstairs just at the wrong psychological moment. No, I guess the plan isn't so good after all.—But you're welcome.—Al the attack. The rescue party was reinforced by two more Alpha Sigs who dashed manacly to the scene of the fray, although entirely unarmed.

With the arrival of four lusty gallants the little hoodlums scattered somewhat but not for long. They advanced again and again, mockingly shaking their fists, only to be repulsed by a feeble attempt at catching them, and a few admonitions to move on. Meanwhile the police had been notified and the four "brave" pledges of Alpha Sigma Phi strode inside to prepare for a final dash.

Down the alley and across the street they tore after the fleeing urchins, now thoroughly frightened. One little culprit, when caught and asked if he wanted to be taken to the police station, tremblingly replied that he was just leaving and didn't want to stop in the first place. "Aw," he said, "the girls are too good-natured to do that anyway."

The chase proceeded to the next block where a car with an open door was waiting. "Jump in, boys," commanded a voice to the unsuspecting and almost exhausted gang. Joyfully they climbed inside and before they realized their predicament were whisked away to the police station.

Nebraska Wins Hearers Vote Over Missouri

cent debate and I enjoyed it very much," stated Judge Wilson, after the ballot had been cast. Missouri was represented by two diminutive, dynamic speakers, who, commanding the interest of the audience, argued that the rights of individuals were being taken away by authoritative designs of the government. The first speaker for the affirmative began his discussion of the question by declaring his three points for argument. He stated that, first the individual does have rights, second, that these rights have been violated by the national government, and third, that this is a deplorable tendency on the part of the government.

He cited as a specific example of national corruptness, in his opinion, the American Protective League, which was authorized by the Department of Justice to read the private mail of individuals, open their safes for inspection, and in other ways, was his contention, that this league infringed upon the rights of individuals.

Debs Case Considered
The case of Eugene V. Debs was brought into consideration by the affirmative, because Debs was thrown into jail for expressing his beliefs on political questions. As late as 1920, the speaker contended, private detectives, working under the authority of the government, entered homes without warrants and further infringed upon individual rights. He summed up his constructive presentation, and maintained that the national and state governments were attempting to regulate the study and teaching of history.

Representing Nebraska, Reginald C. Miller gave the first constructive presentation for the negative. He began his argument by declaring that today the United States is an advanced nation and feels the need for a complex form of government. In his opinion, the United States must change her government with her advancement, and the individualist's form of government must be changed to a modern conception.

Changing Standards
He commented upon the philosophy of the individual as belonging, in some respects, to our fore-fathers, and that the United States was no longer composed of thirteen jealous provinces, isolated from each other by the lack of adequate transportation. We are now citizens of a nation, Mr. Miller, declared, in the true sense of the word, and must act in harmony with national law. In the course of his argument, he expressed his belief that with the industrial revolution, about two per cent of the population of the nation controlled the governing power, and with this radical change in our lives, our government and privileges must be regulated.

This change in the system of life, he stated, has brought many new problems which the people must face. The problems of traffic regulation, labor, manufacturing, trusts, taxation, sanitation, and child welfare, for example are all a result of this industrial change. He contended that if society must undergo such a manifold change, government has to change, and the "gentlemen from Missouri" must show where this tendency is deplorable.

Must Be Balance
Mr. Pollock, the next speaker for the affirmative, stated, "we realize that there has been a change, into a complex society, but there must be a balance between social tendencies, the government, and individual rights." He cited the case of the school teacher in Tennessee who was arrested and convicted because he taught the science of evolution, which was not in accordance with the law of the state. He also brought up the case of the anti-cigarette law which was passed and later repealed in the state of Kansas.

He declared, that while this law was in effect, hundreds of people were made law-breakers because they smuggled cigarettes into the state, and offered proof to show that the cigarette consumption of the middle was for that period was increased half again over the original consumption. "Legal restraint made moral restraint," in his opinion is not true. In answer to Mr. Miller's statement, he declared that he had shown that government control on the rights of the individual is deplorable.

Suits that actually have personality and charm. Styles that are "at home" on the campus, at the theatre, in her parlor or what have you?

The coats are of three-button style with semi-rolled lapels—a new feature that lends a two-button appearance, which by the way, is what the smart fellows are choosing for spring.

The colors found in these new spring suits are a far cry from the drab ones which were so closely identified with the season just passed. They are new and different and in great variety.

negative side of the question, David Fellman stated that the contentions of the "gentlemen from Missouri" were in regard to war-time and were unusual. He related how, during this frenzied period of time, had not the government assumed superior rights over the individual, our civilization might have been swept away before the onslaught of the militarism of Prussia.

He upheld his former statement by adding that the case mentioned by his opponents happened during the war-scare. In answer to a former statement concerning the limitation of the teaching of history, he maintained that this was only in the case of children. "Should the children of America, who are not of the age to understand, be taught by those dissenters, that the government of the United States is an inferior one?" questioned Mr. Fellman.

Audience Has Discussion

He continued his argument by saying that if the Federal Trade Commission has erred in a few instances, there is no reason why it should be abolished, without consideration of the enormous good it does for the country. Over two-thirds of the states, he stated, had prohibition before the national amendment was ratified. "What would better indicate public opinion?"

After the close of the refutation, which allowed each speaker to have
