Kansans Select Curtis For Presidential Race At G.O.P. Convention

Lawrence, Kans., April 28.—Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas was nominated for the presidency of the United States on the Republican ticket here Wednesday night by a mock Republican convention at the University of Kansas. The convention was sponsored by the University Daily Kansan and the department of political science of the University for the purpose of promoting political interest and knowledge of convention proceedings.

It followed in all major details the regular procedure which will be observed in Kansas City next June and on the first ballot, the delegates were instructed to vote as the states they represented will vote on the opening ballot at the regular Republican convention. Hoover led substantially on this ballot with nearly 400 votes of the 556 necessary for nomination. On the second count Lowden, who had been second with 250 on the first, forged ahead to about 300 votes and Hoover dropped slightly behind while Senator Curtis gained from the 150 he had received at first to 167 1/2. On the third ballot, beginning with Alabama which switched unexpectedly from Hoover to Curtis, there was a rush to get on the band wagon and the native son of the state was nominated by a substantial majority.

The convention was characterized by a good deal of horseplay but according to experienced politicians at the University, the disorder was not out of proportion to that in a regular convention. The full quota of 1089 delegates for a Republican convention took part and there were extensive and boisterous demonstrations for various candidates. One demonstration made use of a 10-piece band. In addition to the 1,000 delegates, about 2,000 spectators watched the proceedings. The convention was broadcast over station KFKU, the University radio station.

DURER COLLECTION IS BEING EXHIBITED

University Library Displays Show Masterpieces of Fourteenth Century Artist

Works by Albrecht Durer, celebrated German painter and engraver, born at Nuremberg May 1471, are being displayed in the exhibit case in the hall of the University library. The portrait of Jerome Holzschuher, done in 1526, is considered one of Durer's masterpieces. The original is in the museum at Berlin. There is a print of "The Four Apostles," which Apollo judges as the most imposing picture of the German school. In the display are found three self portraits, one Durer did at the age of 13, another painted in 1498, and the most famous of his self portraits, done in 1500. His "Buste De Jeune Fille" is thoroughly German in its contempt for elegance. Durer was superior to the Italians in etching, and equal to the greatest genius of his time. Three of his best etchings are shown at the library. They are "Melancholy," "The Knight, Death and the Devil," and "Great White Horse."

Adverse Conditions
The son of a goldsmith, it was designed that Durer should learn the same trade, but he inclined otherwise, and in 1498 he became the pupil of Michael Wohlgemuth, a painter of Nuremberg. It seems that Durer's father was always doing something to hinder the development of his son's talent, for in 1494 he forced him into an ill-assorted marriage. But things evidently turned out all right, for in 1505 Durer visited Venice and remained eight months. During this visit he became a very good friend of Raphael. He became the court painter to Maximilian I, and he was patronized also, by Charles V. Vasari expresses the opinion that Durer would have equalled the great masters of Italy if he had been a native of Tuscany and had studied in Rome. However, he has attained wide fame for his etchings, woodcuts, and paintings. He also wrote several works on geometry and perspective. Some critics find fault with his works in that they lack idealism, they feel that Durer has been too realistic both in his choice of subject and in his treatment. Durer died 400 years ago, in April 1528, in Nuremberg.
