OKLAHOMA SECURES NOTED EDUCATORS

Two Groups of Special Instructors Will Be Added to Faculty For Summer Term

Students who attend summer school at the University of Oklahoma this year will have an opportunity to work under two groups of special instructors, in addition to the regular faculty of the school, it was announced recently by Dr. Ellsworth Collings, dean of the school of education and director of the summer session.

These special groups include individuals within the state who have made outstanding records in their profession, and specialists from other schools in the United States who are recognized as authorities in their chosen lines of work.

Many Teach Education Since the summer session enrollment will be made up largely of high school, grade school and college teachers who are working toward bachelor's or master's degrees, the majority of these special instructors will teach in the school of education.

In the first group made up of teachers who are now conducting some constructive project of school work, are six from Oklahoma schools and one from Texas. The group of specialists includes five outstanding Oklahoma educators and one from Tennessee.

Will Meet Specialists "The objects in bringing these groups of specialists here," Doctor Collings said, "are, first, to give summer school students the contact with individuals who are successfully carrying on projects that are contributions to the profession, and, second, to bring students in touch with educators who are experts in the various fields."

In the first group Miss Kate Bilkey, primary instructor in the Tulsa city schools, is doing a constructive piece of work in primary education in the Tulsa system. Charles L. Caldwell, instructor in the training school of the College of Industrial Arts at Denton, Tex., is noted for the outstanding work he is doing there.

Price Is Leader "Edward D. Price, superintendent of city schools in Enid, is doing constructive work in grouping students on the basis of their ability to learn, and is one of the nation's foremost advocates of the intelligence test as a basis of a student's advancement."

May Become Nuisance "It is always a dangerous experiment to introduce a foreign animal or plant," Mr. Collins said, "for some plants may become a terrible nuisance. Some of the best trout streams in England have been choked by American weeds. Some enthusiasts planted a blackberry bush in New Zealand and today that bramble is almost two hundred miles long."

In Nebraska, in addition to the English sparrow, there are thirty-nine other kinds. Mr. J. E. Stipsky of Hoper, when attending the meeting of the Ornithologist union last week, presented to the museum several beautifully mounted sparrows, as he has done several times before.

Miss Calloway of Fairbury, gave an account of the work in bird banding that she has been doing. The birds are trapped, a band bearing various memoranda is put around the left leg of the bird and it is then released. In many cases the birds are never heard from again but many times knowledge concerning the migration of the birds can be built up when the banded birds are found or trapped again.

Geese Are Evangelists A man at Kingsville, Ontario, recently liberated two hundred wild geese bearing verses from the Bible. This man has studied the wild geese for years and has discovered that the geese spends his summers in North Carolina and his winters in Hudson bay and Baffin Land.

On Saturday forty members of the union visited the woodlands south of the city and the ponds north of Lincoln and observed one hundred and three different kinds of birds. There are four hundred and thirty kinds of birds in the state and this is a fourth of them.

"I am afraid I shall never be content," Mr. Collins concluded, "until each of the four hundred and thirty birds of Nebraska is represented in Morrill hall and then anyone of us will be able to see them all in one day, which is what we should be able to do in a state museum."

ALUMNUS FEATURES ROUND-UP SCHEDULE

Historical Sketch of Annual Event Gives Background for 1928 Class Gatherings

May issue of the Nebraska Alumnus, publication of the Nebraska Alumni association, appeared on the campus Friday, and is being mailed to alumni of the University.

The frontispiece is a picture of Administration building, business place of the chancellor, executive dean, and registrar. "College Corral," gatherings of alumni from each college, that is scheduled for Saturday of this week, is explained in the first story of the magazine.

Collins Writes on Birds An article by F. G. Collins, assistant curator of the university museum, on the displays of Nebraska birds that are now located in the museum, contains information on birds not usually thought of by the average observer.

A picture of the Archaeopteryx, found some sixty years ago in Europe and believed to be one of the oldest birds, is reproduced with the article. A cast of the fossil is included in the Nebraska collection.

Chancellor E. A. Burnett, in an article entitled "A Chat with Younger Faculty Members," surveys the field open to the young instructor. He writes, "As I look over the possibilities open to our young instructors, I wonder at their very wealth."

Special Library Course "The special library course during the summer session will have three special instructors in addition to J. L. Rader, university librarian. These include Miss Grace E. Herrick, librarian of Western college, Oxford, Ohio; Miss Elaine Boylan, former student in the University of Illinois library course at Urbana, Ill.; and Miss Frances Blackmer, who completed the University of California library course, and who last year was a student in the American Library school in Paris, France.

"Miss Jessie Newby, Latin instructor in the Oklahoma City Central high school, will be special instructor in Latin during the summer session and will teach a course dealing with ancient Roman coins. Dr. Carlton Coker Rister, professor of history at Simmons university, Abilene, Tex., will serve as special instructor in history."

Dr. Carlton Coker Rister, professor of history at Simmons university, Abilene, Tex., will serve as special instructor in history."

Many opportunities are available, he continues, including graduate study, writing for publication, and other things that will contribute to the University and the state. The chancellor urges that instructors do not lose their contact with the world through their teaching, because new methods are continually being discovered that may change the nature of whole courses of instruction.

An article and illustrations of the work of Dr. Harry E. Stauss of the physics department in examining the X-ray is included in the issue. Dr. Stauss' method of splitting the X-ray beams for study is explained, with illustrations of the equipment used. The account of the organizing of another Cornhusker club, in Johnson county, is given, as well as descriptions of the meetings of two other Nebraska alumni organizations.

Review of Track A review of the present track season, by Gerald Griffin, with pictures of several of the Husker track men, is featured in the athletic section. Frank Pospisil, former member of Nebraska football and track teams, appears in the sport section. "Pos" took two firsts and a second in the field events of an inter-oil company meet down in Venezuela where he is working. A picture of Pospisil carrying home the trophies in a wheelbarrow is included.

Two full-page layouts of Round-Up scenes, taken from last year's gathering, and the review of past meetings is included in Maurice Konkel's article. A discussion of Prof. S. B. Gans' recent article on "Moderism and the Novel" that appeared in the May Forum magazine, is featured in the "Book Shelf" section. Campus happenings and news of the classes make up the remainder of the publication.

Spring Number of Schooner Is Issued

(Continued from Page 1) to include, from time to time, a poem or story by some writer outside the state borders.

Many Contributors Among the contributors to the Spring number are Dr. J. O. Hertzler, professor of sociology, who writes on "Social Immortality;" Hermann T. Decker, assistant instructor in theory and history of music, author of a short story, "Escape;" Dr. Lowry C. Wimberly, writing on "The Red Gentian," and Dr. L. A. Sherman, chairman of the department of English, with an overture on "The Interrupted Experiment."

Poems have been written by Loren C. Easley, M. R. Lowe, Margaret Lawrence Pitzer, Winifred Fry Webster, C. Ernest Sikes, Dorothy Thomas, Martin Severin Peterson, E. Cummings, Charles L. Swan, Wilbur G. Gaffney, Charles Ballard, Nancy W. Sealock, and Edith L. Watson.

The Prairie Schooner is an outlet for literary work in the University of Nebraska and a medium for the publication of the works of writers in the middle west. It is sponsored by the department of English of the University together with Wordsmiths chapter of Sigma Upsilon, national literary fraternity.

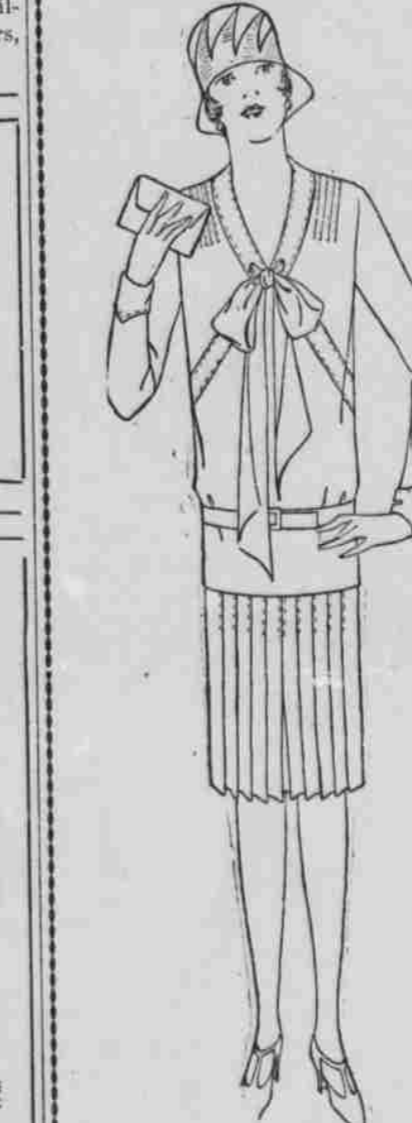

The next number will appear in July and will be termed the Summer edition.
