Mingled Emotions Vie in Stories Students of Days Past Tell in Connection With Ellen Smith

(By William Taylor.) Ellen Smith, registrar of the University of Nebraska for twenty-four years, was loved and respected by students and faculty alike, holds a larger place in university memories than any other woman in the history of the institution.

In addition to her position as registrar, Miss Smith was the first of her sex to hold a teaching position on the university faculty. Duties as instructor in Latin and Greek, as principal of the Latin school, and as custodian of the library, in addition to her administrative tasks, were performed by Miss Smith wholeheartedly, devotedly and efficiently throughout the greater part of her life.

Recently a short book was prepared by the Gamma chapter of Chi Delta Phi, literary organization of university graduates, and undergraduates, which contains several stories on the life and personality of Ellen Smith, written by former students who knew her in life. The biography of Miss Smith is written by Eleanor Hinman.

Iowa State, Drake and Grinnell, the three Iowa schools in the Missouri Valley region, are staging a triangular indoor track meet Saturday and expect a collection of expert performers from the three schools. Although the Bulldogs and Grinnell have not yet seen competition both have fairly strong teams.

Athletic directors of the Big Six conference inaugurated a new custom down at Kansas City for the Big Six indoor track meet next month. In place of the usual attire of white shirts and trousers, the officials at the first annual Big Six indoor meet will appear in a t and the meet in full dress suit.

And now the Notre Dame dreams have come true. The "Irish" are to have a new football stadium. The new structure at Notre Dame will cost more than three quarters of a million and will be ready for the 1930 football campaign, work to start next spring.

Condra Describes Functions and Developments of Conservation, and Survey Departments in Nebraska

(By Bob Laing) "Well! Well! Well! Back again!" This greeting accompanied by a genial smile of welcome was sufficient to break the ice to secure the observations of Dean George Evert Condra, of the conservation and survey department of the University in regard to his division and university evolution.

It was a busy morning hour, but the dean, though busy behind a formidable pile of mail and several half-opened parcels of soil samples, gave a few minutes of his time in recalling the changes and developments of the last twenty-six years at Nebraska.

Questioned first about the growth and development within his own department, Dean Condra described his introduction to the University in 1902. He came to Nebraska connected with the department of geology. His work was chiefly concerned with geology and was carried on in connection with the geology survey.

Three Main Steps He traced the development of this division, that is so little known to most University students, in three main steps. In 1908, the creation of a conservation welfare commission, of which he was director, was created and concerned the promotion of resources in Nebraska.

The dean adjusted himself to a more comfortable position in his swivel chair, re-lit his cigar and paused a moment to recall a date, and to declare that he never could hope to give all the great changes in one issue.

"In 1913 a new law created a commission on soil survey which became a department in the University. In 1918 this combined with the original geology survey and was given charge of all conservation and soil survey. This is as the division is found today, composed of nine departments. These are: the geology survey, soil survey, water survey, state forestry survey, wild life survey, conservation department, industrial survey, photographic service and an information bureau.

Work With Government "This work is now carried on in co-operation with the federal government. The personnel, besides the regular employees, includes assignees from Washington, D. C. So you see, this division is really a university within itself." When asked for a statement in connection with his favorite department of the work, the dean only smiled at the futility of such a question, but descended to relate a few facts about the soil survey department.

"This department works about four or five counties a year, and has completed to date a detailed survey of sixty-five Nebraska counties. Maps and detailed data of every conceivable area of the state are covered, showing all the soils, drainage facilities and cultural possibilities. Every forest, river, lake, ditch, schoolhouse, and church, even the buildings on the farms and ranches, are charted.

"The results of this extensive work are used in farm management schools, road building and farm loan organizations. It is a service that was so greatly appreciated, that a national soil survey association including United States, Mexico and Canada has been formed."

Condra is President During the past year Dean Condra served as president of this association. He brushed aside another question and related some of the work in other departments, of taking maps, charts and books here and there to show the detail of the work covered. Chief among these was a bulletin edited by Dean Condra, and called NEBRASKA BEAUTIFUL. It points out how the spirit of development has grown in Nebraska.

"Why it's the most fundamental work of the University!" he exclaimed enthusiastically, and at this juncture left the room to point out the work in the various departments in the division.

"My office used to be on the third floor in the old museum. As the departments grew or others were added, however, we were transferred to the basements of University and Nebraska halls. Now we are in this location in Nebraska hall and the studio and I like it fine, because our work has grown.

Have Camera Equipment "The interest in this service is evident, in that, we have 10,000 worth of camera equipment alone. And, do you know how many lectures I have given over the state

B & F PASTERS YOUR OLD BROWN YOUR OLD BLUE, OR WHATEVER THE HUE OF THAT OLD SUIT YOU LIKE TO WEAR AND KEEP ON WEARING, GO AHEAD AND WEAR IT IF IT CARRIES THE B&F LABEL. IT'S CORRECT. PASTE THAT IN YOUR HAT BENNETT & FLUGSTAD 'Across from the Campus'

In this work?" The answer was an awed "No." "Sixteen hundred," he replied and then, laughing, "Enough to kill any man." The dean appeared very much alive, however, and keyed to his work. At this point, the reporter remembered Dean Condra's dynamic influence with the spirit of the school, and asked about this phase of university life. The dean paused, as if to remember some illustrative incident.

"When I first came to Nebraska, I was associated in my work with Cornell University. There I became acquainted with the spirits of institutions and resolved to inject it into Nebraska students." The dean related, none-too-willingly, the lack of purpose and dignity that was then outstanding in university students.

Had No Spirit "They loitered. They lounged. They did not attack things like they meant it." With this in mind Condra became instrumental in establishing the Olympics. "We called a junior and senior class meeting to see what could be done about eliminating the weak and asphyxiated atmosphere in our student life. We decided that an event like the Olympics would do away with the horseplay and tomfoolery and build up real enthusiasm.

"This event has served its purpose now and we have grown away from that old childishness, but out of its scheme, boxing, wrestling and other minor sports were created at Nebraska." The dean emphasized that in his work, he was "a connecting link between here and out there (over the state)." It was his aim and purpose in high school talks and lectures to emphasize the student's purpose in coming to the University.

"These boys must feel a pride in their institution!" he stated emphatically, and strode about the room as though to relieve his mind of the weight of this truism. "Organization was necessary, so we set about for the initiation of all freshmen. With the chancellor, I framed the freshman oath, for the purpose of having some definite standard and ideal. Now it is established and a real spirit of the school prevails."

There was a note of satisfaction, not with himself by any means, but with the institution that he loves, in this last statement. Then the man to whom The Daily Nebraskan was once dedicated, the co-advisor with Coach Schulte of the Innocents honorary senior society, and the man who's efforts have borne fruit in making Nebraska one of the best both in its department and in its student life—which was optional, suddenly remembered that there was work awaiting him in a room down the hall where the interview had started.

"University life permeates the life over the state." That was the final statement of the dean, but if this is the ideal condition and an enthusiastic twinkle of the eye means anything, great strides towards this end have been made since 1902.

The evolution of Nebraska football rallies and described by Dean Condra, is very interesting. At first rallies were held in a barn, then in a restaurant, and finally in hotels. The giant rallies held in the coliseum would indicate growth and development on a large scale.

Bulldogs brought their total up to 5. Moeber was replaced by Boves who entered the scoring column soon after his entry into the game. Half Ends 26-12 The half ended with the score standing 26-12 favoring the Huskers, Maclay and Fisher being responsible for most of the Nebraska counters.

The play speeded up considerably after the ten-minute rest, and Drake was playing Nebraska more evenly for the first few minutes of the second half. Their rally, however, was cut short, but Nebraska was not hooping their baskets in as regularly as in the first canto.

Second Five Sent In With a comfortable lead to rest upon, Nebraska sent in a complete five, consisting of Munn, Jensen, Davey, Holm and Olson. After several minutes play with no scoring to their credit, Coach Black jerked this combination, and replaced them with Grace, Fisher, Maclay, Lewandowski and Witte, all of which had started the game.

The game never regained the first half speed after this change and the margin between the two teams remained about the same until the end of the game. Harvey Grace was having a hard evening getting along with the officials, getting three personal fouls called on him during the game. Fouls were plentiful for both teams, Drake getting 8, while Nebraska contributed 13 charity chances to the Bulldogs.

The box score of the basketball game is as follows:
