Beaux Arts Picks Hill To Head Prize Contest

W. G. Hill of the architectural engineering department has been appointed the official supervisor of the state of Nebraska for the twenty-third annual Paris prize drawing contest by the Beaux Arts institute of New York City. The Paris prize committee will conduct two preliminary competitions during the school year in connection with the Beaux Arts institute of which the Nebraska architectural department is a member.

NEBRASKANS WILL BE ALLOWED TRY AT TRAVEL AWARD

Wilfred G. Hill, of the department of architectural engineering, has just received a notice in regard to the Guy Lowell Memorial competitive scholarship in architecture. The competition is open on equal terms to any student over twenty-one and under thirty-one who is a citizen of the United States, and who has not been the beneficiary of any other traveling scholarship. This scholarship is an annual award of $1,000 to assist the draftsman by giving him six months of study and travel in foreign countries. All students wishing to compete must register through Mr. Hill before Dec. 15. The sketches are to be drawn during the first weekend in February between 5 p. m. Friday and 9 a. m. Monday. All sketches must be postmarked before Feb. 3, 1930.

Intramural Organization Sponsors Radio Program

The intramural organization of the university was in charge of a radio broadcast Monday afternoon from KFAB over the campus studio. The merits of the organizations and the popular sports were described. Antoinette Lococo played two violin selections, "Polish Dance" by Edmund Severn and "Sympathy" by Fritz. She was accompanied by Cornelia Gant. Bernice Schellenberg played several piano solos and Betty Freeman sang several numbers with Indian themes. Among them were "Indian Dawn" and "Pale Moon." The broadcast was under the direction of Adele Eisler and Bernice Hoffman.

Mechanical Arts Building Gets Calculating Units

Equipment has been purchased for use in the mathematical computing laboratory recently installed in the mechanic arts building. Two 10-bank calculating machines have been installed and a third 8-bank machine will be added soon. At the present time another company has given the use of two 9-bank electrical calculating machines. According to Dr. C. C. Camp, the equipment of the college of business administration had to be used.

previously. With the calculating laboratory, classes in statistics and insurance can be more adequately handled.

"Much mail today; too much work for my burro"

This is only one example of the promptness with which McGraw-Hill Publications are read. But more than that, it illustrates how the industrial and engineering press closely knits together widely-scattered groups of professional men.

To the next generation's leaders of engineering and industry, the McGraw-Hill Publications offer a way to get a running start on their first jobs. Here's how. Spend a few minutes each week reading the outstanding publication in the field where you intend to make your mark. Learn what is being done by the present leaders in your chosen profession. Get the "feel" of industry before you enter it.

Copies of practically every McGraw-Hill Publication are—or should be—in the college library.
