Nautical Motif Carried Out at Delta Gamma Pledge Party

Nautical decorations in harmony with the anchor of Delta Gamma featured a house dance given by the pledges for the active members of the chapter Saturday evening. A gangplank provided entrance to the house where lifesavers inscribed with S. S. Delta Gamma hung on the walls and portholes disguised the windows. A large silver anchor hung at one end of the room and flags were suspended from the ceilings. Life saver, cookies, and champagne bottle horns completed the nautical effect.

Margaret Dawson, Kappa Alpha Theta pledge, has been forced to leave school for the remainder of the semester because of ill health. An informal fireside party was given in her honor by her sorority sisters Monday evening before her departure for her home in Wyoming. Miss Dawson expects to return to her work in the university by the second semester.

Marvin Robinson and Elmer Lohr, both of Delta Upsilon, spent the week end at Robinson's home in St. Joseph, Mo., where they were honored at a studio party.

William Adams, San Francisco, grand president of Sigma Phi Sigma, was a guest at the local chapter Friday.

LINCOLN MAN GIVEN AGRICULTURAL AWARD

Prof. R. H. Haecker Gets Honor for Work in Dairy Field.

Prof. R. H. Haecker, pioneer in dairy work in Minnesota and now a resident of Lincoln, was given agriculture's highest honor Tuesday, when the American Farm Bureau federation bestowed upon him its distinguished service award.

Word of the honor was received from Boston, where the federation is holding its national convention. It was given to two others also, one a man and one a woman.

The honor came to the Lincoln man for his work in founding the co-operative dairy system in Minnesota, for research in livestock and co-operative marketing, and for organizing the farm creamery system which has resulted in Land o' Lakes, Inc., which has 400 member creameries in Minnesota.

Lives With Son.

The first knowledge that Professor Haecker had of the award came to him when he was telephoned by a Lincoln newspaper this morning. He is spending the winter in Lincoln with his son, who is secretary of the Nebraska creamery butter manufacturers association.

Professor Haecker was recently named one of the "Twelve Apostles" of Minnesota for his work in feeding of dairy livestock in his pioneering efforts in co-operative creameries by the late William F. Folwell, former president of the University of Minnesota in a compilation of the history of the state.

His early youth was spent on a farm ten miles from Madison, Wis., and his interest developed early in the caring for dairy cattle and bettering their production. Mr. Haecker said, "I attended the first dairy school founded in the United States at the University of Wisconsin. I enrolled in the course one Monday, and the next Monday I was on the teaching staff augmenting the theoretical knowledge of the teaching staff with my practical knowledge. Within four weeks after the school opened I was invited to Minnesota to organize the dairying school there."

Was Executive Clerk. "Previous to this time I had served seventeen years as executive clerk to the governor of Wisconsin, being originally appointed by Gov. W. R. Taylor, who had a farm adjacent to ours. I was given the "grand bounce" when a democrat came into office, and thus came about the trend of events that led to my going to Minnesota.

"During my first spring in Minnesota I was commissioned to make a survey of dairy conditions in the state. I found them in deplorable shape with both consumers and producers thoroughly disgusted. Churning plants were scattered over the state, and often times the consumer was getting a low grade price. I found this condition prevalent until I arrived at Clarks Grove, where a plant managed and operated by the producers was on a paying basis. The price obtained for their products was ten to fourteen cents higher than other farmers were getting."

Developed Co-Operative. It was from this bit of information that Professor Haecker, aided by the faculty of whom A. J. McGuire, of the Land o' Lakes association, is now general manager, developed the co-operative movement. The mentioned association during 1929 shipped 738 carloads of cream, and did a business of over $50,000,000.

Thus during the first part of Professor Haecker's residence in Minnesota, he spent the winter six months in the class rooms and the other six developing the creamery industry in the state. Research work in feeding and methods of obtaining the largest production from dairy cattle kept him busy. His search for new standards in milk and meat products occupied his time for twenty-seven years

Writer Thinks College Spoils Girls For Home

"For an average girl who intends to make marriage her chief business—and thank heaven, they are still in the majority—to waste four precious years, that ought to be devoted to romantic adventure, at college seems tragic," says Nina Wilcox Putnam in a recent magazine article. "I think it is a heap more important to get married than to go to college and I sincerely believe that college interferes with marriage, at least a successful marriage."

Miss Putnam believes that college should be kept for grinds and our "marriageable daughters" should strut their stuff at home. "If a girl wants an occupation, the author believes that she should get a job, which will teach her more in a month that will be of real value to her than she'll get out of four years at a college."

"It seems to me that the usual girl who attends a co-educational college lacks that romantic illusion which is such a precious possession. She becomes bored and sophisticated about sex because of its familiarity to her while she is yet too young to get a proper kick out of it. However, I believe there is a lot to be said in favor of co-educational colleges. In fact, the worst that can be said about them is that they throw people of opposite sexes who are still pretty young for the task, into a lot of grownup situations which they are really not capable of handling," says Miss Putnam.

"How can a girl be interested in a home if she is given no training in regards to one?" the writer asks. "She never sees a home except between dances during holidays. How can she be expected to make a good cake when she is only expected to make whoopee? Just as long as husbands have stomachs, good home made pie will mean more to them than their wife's college reunions."

"And moreover, men simply don't take the average college girl's career seriously. The girl whose career in college is worth considering seriously, eligible men are not apt to know well enough to discuss. And unquestionably the average boy at college still has a faintly contemptuous attitude toward his feminine costudent. Her tepid or fervent thirst for knowl-

Phi Gams, Fijis Throw Eggs and Amuse Selves at Annual Field Day

Forming a parade more than a block in length, the Phi Gams and Sig Alphas, Saturday celebrated the second annual field day between the two fraternities with a procession from the Phi Gamm house to the Sig Alpha household and then to the stadium where the contests of the day were held. Keith Hopewell, the Fiji challenger, mounted upon a white plug, led the parade.

The events of the afternoon starting with the parade were: the bicycle race, won by the Sig Alpha; a soccer game, also won by the S. A. E.'s and a freshman speciality, consisting of tossing rotten eggs at ten paces. This was declared to be a draw. Besides the members of the two groups, about 100 spectators witnessed the affair.

The parade included a band, several hayracks, one hearse, cars and a tandem bicycle. A temporary halt was made at the S. A. E. house for the reading of the challenge by Hopewell and its acceptance, by Thomas Vanderhoof, S. A. E., from a position on the house top.

Following the field events the two organizations held an exchange dinner, after which a hard times party was held at the Roseville.

dots upon harmful insects, and there are those that increase the fertility of the soil, or act as scavengers.

"No, sir, it would do no harm for everyone to become a little more 'buggy,'" Prof. Swenk concluded. "There is something about life that few people understand. Insects, as low as they are, reveal much about that life."

He feels that the farmer is appreciative of steps taken in his behalf, but that private interests are the main obstacle to general improvements when they feel that their own interests may be harmed thru any advanced step.

Many insects of course, Prof. Swenk, reiterated, injure growing crops and other valuable plants. Some attack and annoy man and animals and carry dangerous diseases to them. Others destroy or depreciate the value of stored products and possessions.

Useful products or articles of commerce, on the other hand, are produced by certain of the beneficial insects. Many of these small forms of life act as instruments effecting pollination. Some insects serve as food for animals that are in turn valuable to humans. Still other kinds act as preevent setting under way at 4 o'clock. Any man enrolled in the university is eligible for this meet. Silver and bronze medals will be awarded first and second place winners in each event, according to Rudy Voegelier, director of intramural athletics.
