

COLLEGES 'STEAL' MUSIC FOR CAMPUS TUNES, IS REPORT

Is all the originality that American college men boast of merely so much bluff and bushwah? When you consider the American college and university songs, you would have to admit it, according to "The Queen's English," appearing in the August issue of College Stories magazine. Most of our American college songs are "steals"—not only the music, but often, even the words, are close copies of other songs.

Cornell's famed Alma Mater, "Far Above Cayuga's Waters," is not at all original. It was written by H. S. Thompson, back in the Civil war days, under the original title of "Annie Lisle," and has been changed to "Amici." Cornell used the music, adding its own words. Then, Syracuse, Alabama, Kansas, Swarthmore, Lehigh, Greenville, Buchtel, have taken it for their Alma Mater. Moravian, Illinois, Missouri, Denver, and dozens of other colleges not to mention hundreds of high schools, have written words to the music.

Holyoke, Dickinson, Cornell, Emerson, Butler, Midland, Montana state, and several dozen more have utilized old folk songs to furnish music for various of their college songs. Amherst, Iowa college, University of Michigan, University of Nebraska, and University of Colorado, have used "Pirate's HCorus," by Balfe, for their songs. "Fair Harvard," and "Old Nassau" are both imported tunes.

In fact, colleges have fancied almost everything from the "Russian National Hymn," "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," "Die Wacht Rhine," "Marching Thru Georgia," and others, thru "Mandala" and "Araby's Daughter," are among the songs utilized by the major colleges for their use. Some might even have "The Star Spangled Banner" as their music.

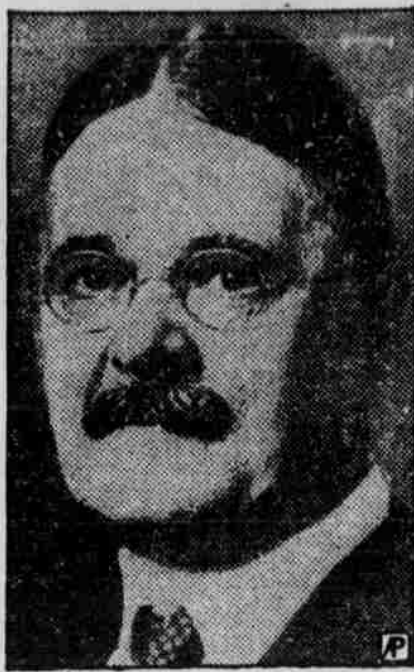

However, the colleges have redeemed themselves in their modern football fight songs. Most of these are original, both as to music and words. There are some adaptations in these, but only in the case of the smaller schools.

And the fraternity songs are, in many cases, original. In fact, they present the greatest originality.

Not that all our college songs are not original. Amherst's "Lord Geoffrey Amherst," is tru-blue; the "Washington and Lee swing" is another, and Penn's "Red and Blue" is all original.

COLLEGE GIRLS MAKE FINE WIVES, SO THE BOYS SAY

College boys like college girls—like them enough to marry them, in preference to marrying any other type of girl. The college girls not only have "it," but they have intelligence, they have a knowledge of the higher values of life; they have a broader viewpoint, have the same status as the college man—therefore, they will make the better wives.

At least, that is the result of a nationwide poll which is being conducted by College Stories Magazine. Questionnaires sent to undergrads of American colleges and universities brought forth replies from every part of the country, most of them frank, honest opinions that did not hesitate to point to personal experience as a basis for the answer. Many of the undergrads were planning to marry college girls, and many others had nothing but the highest praise for the girls who are in our institutions of learning. Some pointed out defects, and a few claimed that going to college did a girl more harm than good.

One of the answers that brought the tide tremendously in favor of the coeds was from a statistical hound, who showed that marriage figures kept in the state of Kansas show the divorce rate to be one to every five marriages among non-college graduates, but only one to every hundred among college graduates. Therefore, the college boy who marries a coed has ninety-nine chances out of a hundred of being right.

The poll, although not yet completed, shows a marked trend in favor of the girls. It looks as though the "Its" have it.
