

CYCLONES START PREPARING FOR HUSKER BATTLE

Veenker Eleven Faces Tilt With No Players on Injury List.

HOLD LIGHT WORKOUTS

Title Fray Saturday Marks Iowa's First Chance at Championship.

AMES, Ia.—When Iowa State meets the Cornhuskers Saturday in the Big Six conference grid championship tilt, Coach George Veenker will be at freedom to use any lineup he wishes, as not a single man will be out on account of injuries. Light workouts are on the schedule for the Cyclones as they round into form for the final contest and their opportunity to win their first Big Six conference football championship.

Ivan Impson, fullback, who suffered a broken leg in the second game of the season at Morning-side, has been taking light workouts the past week and may see action Saturday. Bauman, tackle, who suffered a sprained ankle in the Drake game will be in good shape for the Nebraska tilt according to Coach Veenker. Templeton, 200 pound wingman, who was unable to see much action in the Bulldog encounter on account of knee injuries will also be in top shape for the Nebraskans.

The week's drill program consists of scrimmages Tuesday and Wednesday against Nebraska formations executed by freshman teams. Coach Veenker is confronted with the problem of building an attack against a much heavier team. The Husker line averages slightly heavier than Iowa State's, and the backfield is much heavier.

Between halves of the football encounter the undefeated Cyclone two-mile team will bid for its second consecutive Big Six conference championship. The decisive defeat of the Kansas Jayhawkers last Saturday renders the Iowa State harriers a topheavy favorite to beat Coach "Indian" Schulte's proteges since Kansas downed the Huskers as decisively earlier in the season. Lyle Chapman, who was defeated for the first time this season by Cunningham of Kansas last Saturday will be forced to his best to beat Ayres of Nebraska next Saturday, altho Chapman has been turning in the fastest times so far this fall.
