Campus Decorated By Wintery Cloak As Snow Descends

By Jane Boos.
Snow! Snow! More snow! Students returning from holiday vacations were greeted by a campus greatly changed and dressed up by a dazzling blanket of snow. Trees formerly bleak and bare without their foliage are now shadowed with white. Low shrubs are so completely covered as to look like mounds of cotton. Pine trees once desolate and forlorn against a grey background are now draped in lacy white. Dead grass and brown ground are as completely hidden as are the streets and sidewalks.

Last Wednesday and Thursday brought this lovely decoration to our campus. According to T. A. Blair of the United States Weather Bureau it is the heaviest snow of the season, having a maximum depth of 6.9 inches and yielding a precipitation of 1.62 inches.

The snappy weather accompanying the snow seems to have renewed vim and energy, it may be judged by the actions of a certain college "Ed" who stood on the corner of 12th and R streets Monday noon and threw snowballs at all passing unfortunates.

All in all snow seems to be the thing of the hour.
