THEODORE DIERS, RADIO DIRECTOR, TELLS OF EXCITING DAYS AS BROADWAY ACTOR.

(Continued from Page 1.) on another road trip with it. The same company was held over the next season for another Joe Weber show.

Yearning for a role on the legitimate stage, Mr. Diers did not go on the tour this time, but abandoned the show after its New York run.

"The Clanman" was then one of the outstanding stage productions and it was in this show that Mr. Diers succeeded in securing a place.

When the play made its southern tour, Mr. Diers revealed, an advance man spread its story throughout the community.

YES SIR IF IT'S FUN WE HAVE IT! Drop out this week end and enjoy a real time.

and have the decrees set aside or see that they were recognized. The publicity accompanying such legal proceedings invariably aroused public interest and when the company arrived it found the theaters sold out.

Cut Wires. Many of those opposed to the production did not stop with the failure of their attempt at injunction, but used other means in trying to stop its showing.

In another town a race riot was involved, all of which caused a great deal of anxiety among the company.

Only a few days later Carl Ahrendt, an outstanding character actor, became sick in Vicksburg and died shortly.

"Among the actors of the day," Mr. Diers says, "existed the superstition that, if a death occurs in a company, two more are certain to follow."

A rather humorous incident was related by Mr. Diers, when he told of the handicap a cast labored under while playing in New Haven, Conn.

The building had a level floor with a platform at one end and was not equipped with dressing rooms.

As the men made their way to the stage for the first act, they were blindfolded while they passed through the dining room.

After having been on the stage several years, Mr. Diers took a position as stage manager with a company.

He went to Wyoming to visit his brother and while there became connected with a bank as cashier.

With such a career as this behind him, Mr. Diers can speak with authority on the practical side of drama and its production on the American stage during the last quarter century.

COEDS' DEBATE NEBRASKA MEN LACK COURTESY

In several cases women students either had to resignedly force their way or allow themselves to be jostled by men in order to get thru the doorway.

The question, "Do you think Nebraska men are more or less courteous to women students than men in other schools?" was asked fifteen uppers class coeds prominent in campus activities.

"I do not think Nebraska men are as polished in manners as the men in other schools, particularly those of the east and southeast," declared Bernice Hoffman, president of the Associated Women Students and member of Mortar Board.

Bette Wilson, Betty Jane Blank, Pi Beta Phi, and Dorothy Orr, Kappa Alpha Theta, added their condemnation of men to Miss Hoffman's.

"Manners are not very polished—there's room for improvement," commented Helen Drummond, Kappa Alpha Theta.

Said Gertrude Clark, Alpha Xi Delta: "I don't think they are overly courteous here. On the whole, while they are not so bad, they could be better."

Dorothy Brewer, Chi Omega transfer of Oklahoma City, held that courtesy here is more lax than at southern schools, saying: "In matters of common courtesy," she said, "I think Nebraska men are probably as well mannered as men elsewhere, but in little courtesies that every girl appreciates, and in the manner in which they perform them I think southern fellows are far superior."

Taking the other side of the argument, five girls vouched for the courtesy of the men.

"I think they are courteous, but you find the superficial polish more characteristic of the east. University life makes an improvement," said Roseline Pizer, Sigma Delta Tau.

Mary Alice Kelly, Gamma Kappa Gamma, vigorously supported the case of the men. Said she: "I think they are as courteous as elsewhere, but I haven't come in contact with many outsiders. I should say the Nebraska men are 'O. K.'"

"On the whole I think Nebraska men are as courteous as they think the girl in question demands," replied Eleanor Dixon, Chi Omega, non-committally.

Said Margaret Buol, also of Chi Omega, satirically: "So far in my college career I haven't had to open the door or carry my books or put myself in a car when any of Nebraska's young gallants were hovering around."

"It's about fifty-fifty," said Jane Axtell, Alpha Chi Omega. "I think that it is a rule that worked both ways. Courteous girls generally exact courtesy from the fellows and viso versa."

Jean Rathburn, Delta Gamma, president of Motor board, took no definite stand. "There is the good and the bad everywhere you go. I find that Nebraska men are an average group. This is the extent of my knowledge. Fellows either know how to use good manners or they do not," she evaded.

tainly hadn't noted any of it on our campus."

Said Dr. Ada Walker, adviser to the Panhellenic council: "I think at heart Nebraska men are more courteous than in many other places, but in actual expression they often slip up on many of the little details which outsiders note and criticize."

A few sorority housemothers questioned said they believed Nebraska men were quite courteous, or took no stand on the question.
