MORE ABOUT MODERNISM.

Two announcements in yesterday morning's Daily Nebraskan bring out the old and now almost forgotten idea that a university is a place to accumulate and assimilate not only knowledge but a certain amount of culture and the veneer of civilization.

Advocates and disciples of the educational systems will be in hearty accord with the idea that a university is more than a mill for the grinding out of good American citizens equipped to go to work for the purpose of accumulating enough of the almighty dollar to be able to send their offspring to university for the same purpose.

It is the contention of The Daily Nebraskan that presentations of the type of "Othello" with such a fine man as Hart Jenks in the interpretative role can do more to improve the mind and cultivate the intellect than any one of a dozen semester courses which are required by century old customs of the antiquated educational system under which we labor.

Despite the disadvantages to the open stack system The Daily Nebraskan still holds to its idea in a modified form. It seems entirely possible that the shelves in the library now used for antiquated copies of aged magazines could well be utilized for the purpose of placing books of interest before the eyes of those who frequent the hall.

Obstacles in the nature of finance, disinterested attendance, and poor facilities have hindered the University Players for all the years of their existence. They have persisted and are now recognized as one of the finest groups of their kind anywhere in the United States.

So where shall we lay the blame? Is it the students who are at fault? Or shall we lay it at the door of the administration? Let us say rather that our present educational system is the cause of the lack of interest in intellectual attainments and that the lack of aid to be found from the administration arises from the same source.

One wishes that the "observer" would observe a nice warm change in the weather.

The Daily Nebraskan, in order to maintain the high standard set by college newspapers, must have a staff of dependable reporters. It is obvious that the reportorial staff of The Daily Nebraskan is dependable, but it is equally obvious that The Nebraskan is not getting all the campus news that it should have. The reason lies in the fact that The Nebraskan reportorial staff is not large enough to cope with the immense quantities of news available on the Nebraska campus.

It is to be believed that the Nebraska students do not realize the importance of their official publication. True, the importance was made very clear when students did not have the paper to tell them about registration fees, but nevertheless, many who sit in the "Moon" and remark about the news value of the Nebraskan, little realize the work that is necessary every day to supply them with their daily paper.

At the present time, as has been intimated before, The Daily Nebraskan is in the market for dependable reporters. The Daily Nebraskan offers them interesting profitable work. It offers them the opportunity to be of service to the university, in a manner that is pleasant and fascinating.

Ab, woman, how difficult is an understanding of thy nature. Yea, verily, thou takest thy newest flame unto the Moon for eaking purposes and tell him all about that one with whom ye eaked on yesterday. Yea, verily, 'tis difficult of understanding.

If only some of these radio orchestra leaders would pay more attention to directing their orchestra instead of directing their voice over the microphone, what a satisfaction it would be.

College Editors Say—

The Students vs. Mr. Mars.

The fact that 92.8 percent of the 24,600 college students who voted in a poll on the disarmament question, taken recently in seventy different colleges and universities of the United States, favored either complete or partial disarmament should be significant.

The nation-wide straw vote was sponsored by the Intercollegiate Disarmament Council. Following the conclusive results of the voting, Luther Tucker, Yale '31, chairman, headed a delegation to President Hoover asking the latter to appoint one outstanding college student on the delegation from this country to the Geneva arms conference in February.

The tabulations revealed that a third of the voters advocated 100 percent armament reductions, provided all nations should agree; and over 15,000 collegians thought that the United States should set the example by leading in the disarmament program.

There is nothing truer than the statement that should there be another war, college men would be among the first to be called into service. In the World war, thousands of young men left American universities to "make the world safe for democracy" and never returned.

While there is as much distrust among nations of the world as now exists, total disarmament is not practical; but it is essential that positive moves in that direction be taken as soon as possible.

It is gratifying to know that college students, representing the thinking population of the United States, are fully cognizant of this. Therefore, it is their unqualified duty, as intelligent citizens, to prevent the nations of the world from resorting to armed force and bloodshed to settle their disputes, rather than by arbitration.

At the time the feed loans were closed up last December, $168,777.00 had been loaned to Nebraska farmers in the seven counties. Many farmers who did not think they needed to borrow last fall, and the farmers who borrowed at that time will undoubtedly want more money since they did not realize their needs nor expect the severe cold and snow which has increased the need for livestock feeds in that area during the past five or six weeks.

Engineering skill.. on trial at the old courthouse

That afternoon fire had raged, wiping out much of the business section, reducing the telephone building to smoking ruins. That night, Western Electric men were at work converting an old courthouse into a telephone exchange. The next day both local and long distance communication was restored in the stricken town... Western Electric accepts many such challenges as this. Challenges that put to the test the engineering skill of its Installation Department, that call into play the resources and facilities of its nationwide system of distribution. Backing up a far-flung line of communication is only one phase of Western Electric's responsibility to the Bell System. Equally important is the purchasing of supplies and materials and the manufacture of telephones and telephone equipment.
