Largest Museum Giraffe In U. S. Moves Into Home At Morrill Hall

—Courtesy Sunday Journal and Star.

You have never fully appreciated the true pulchritude of the African giraffe until you have visited the regal member of that species now residing in Morrill hall. He is dressed in the warm shades of rust brown and cream so approved by stylists this fall; and looks down from his height of an imposing fourteen feet, seven inches with a magnificent scorn which he can justly claim. Moreover he can boast the proud distinction of having bested in deadly combat the king of the jungles, for he bears four deep scratches on his satin neck and great ugly lines left on his side by the lion's claw, testifying to the fact.

This newest seven hundred and fifty-pound acquisition is the largest and finest articulated giraffe secured by any American museum. He is one of the specimens from the Adam Breede collection consigned to the University of Nebraska by the living members of the Breede family. The late Adam Breede, Hastings, secured one of the largest and finest sets of skins ever brought into the United States when he made his extensive big game hunt in Africa in 1825. The collection, now in New York, is being mounted by the university as quickly as finances permit. There will soon be another addition to elephant hall when the enormous elephant now being mounted in the Morrill hall laboratory is ready for display.

Four Day Chase. Our particular pet giraffe gave Adam Breede an exhausting four day chase before he surrendered to his American pursuer. He still retains that quizzical, wild animal at bay expression he must have worn as he surveyed Mr. Breede from his lofty vantage point. The credit goes to James L. Clark, director of zoological exhibits in the American museum on Natural History, New York city, assisted by Murry Roper, Mr. Clark, a former Lincoln boy and student at the University of Nebraska, designed the pose in miniature from which his assistants worked out the life sized model, with his supervision of the stretching of the skin and of sub-form to the upperclass commission Tuesday at 4 o'clock at Ellen Smith hall.

Men's Commercial Club. There will be a meeting of the Men's Commercial club Tuesday evening, Oct. 12 at 7:30 in the Commercial club room. All active members are required to attend.

SANDU J. NELSON CHRISTANANDA HERE ON LECTURE TOUR PRAISES GANDHI AND CRITIZES OUR EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

British. We follow the British curriculum as a more solid type of education and better discipline than the American. We are not satisfied with it. It needs reforming and we want to bring it to that standing of the ancient times, giving more moral and spiritual instruction as in the ancient days."

Mr. Christananda's only comment on the caste system was that due to a national movement it is being dissolved. "The origin of the caste which goes back centuries, is really cleanliness," he stated, "but due to the influence of a national movement it is breaking up." "My purpose in America is the preaching of Christ and giving expression to my mystic experiences, talking on comparative religions to show the differences between the living Christ and the old powerless religion and Christian cults; telling people why the world does need Christ and showing individuals the possibilities of the inner pulses of a genuine spiritualization."

Mr. Christananda received his education in South India, and holds several degrees. He speaks English fluently, besides two of his Indian dialects, and five European languages. He also has a knowledge of Greek and Hebrew. He has been travelling and lecturing for twelve years and has visited every country in Europe except Rurria. He has just finished a tour of Canada.
