TUESDAY'S WORKOUT FINDS CORNHUSKERS IN PLAYFUL SPIRITS

Sauer Kept Busy Throwing Passes as Team Eyes S.M.U. Finale.

The Huskers were in a playful mood Tuesday afternoon, and their high spirits enabled them to snap through one of the best workouts since the week of the Pittsburgh game. It was dummy practice again, with George Sauer raining pass after pass to the ends and backs, Hokuf, Roby, Boswell and Masterson being most frequently on the receiving end.

With the Nubbins adopting the defensive style of play used by Southern Methodist, two varsity elevens rehearsed their formations including some new plays that may keep the Mustangs guessing. Bernie Masterson, Jack Miller, Chris Mathis and George Sauer was the first string backfield getting the call, and Coach Bible said Tuesday that they would start Saturday against S. M. U.

Wednesday afternoon, the B players will demonstrate typical plays of the Southern Methodist offense, while the squad will take a light drill before leaving at 5 p. m. Thursday. Twenty-five men will be included in the Nebraska party on the first trip ever taken by a Cornhusker team into the southland.

ARTISTS SEND COPIES OF ORIGINAL PICTURE

Clarissa Bucklin Receives Nebraska Scrapbook Illustrations.

In response to requests from Miss Clarissa Bucklin of the Fine Arts Library for samples or reproductions of their work, several of the artists mentioned in "Nebraska Art and Artists," pamphlet published by the University School of Fine Arts, have sent original prints as well as complimentary comments on the booklet.

Grant T. Reynard, artist from Grand Island, Nebraska, gave the library the original of the favorably received etching, "Metropolitan Print Room." Mrs. Alice McCoun, Omaha, Nebraska, contributed two original etchings, "Abraham Lincoln" and "Silhouette."

Miss Bucklin has also received two pen drawings from Frank Benak, a photographic reproduction of a 6 1/2 x 13 1/2 inch mural from the celebrated William Ireland, three photographs of oil paintings by Mrs. Willmore, and a cartoon by Gay Williams.

These are being collected for the purpose of forming a scrap book containing representative works of the more prominent Nebraska artists.

United States Worrying About Being War Debt 'Suckers,' Says Prof. Arndt

"In the matter of war debts the United States is more worried about being definitely proved 'suckers' by Europe than she is about losing the money," says Prof. Karl M. Arndt of the economics department. "Europe claims, however, that in spite of our insistence that the debts be paid we are doing all we can to prevent payment. We want to collect, but we won't take the money."

"Europe has only three ways by which she can obtain the dollars necessary to pay the debt. They could be obtained in exchange for gold, but for the fact that Europe can not part with her gold without ruin for what is left of her gold standard, that the United States already has a sufficient supply and could not use much more without being subject to the curse of Midas and that there is not enough gold in Europe to pay the debt anyway."

ing to Professor Arndt, is also blocked by the United States. Europe could secure American dollars by borrowing money from private individuals in the United States but the American investor does not have enough confidence in European bonds just now to put much more money into them. Anyway, it would merely be postponing the issue because the investors would have to be paid eventually. That way the debt would be transferred from the American government to the American people—that is if the American people would buy the foreign bonds, which is very unlikely, he said.

"The third way would be for Europe to secure American dollars by sending to this country an excess of goods over our exports to them and paying the debt with money obtained in exchange for this excess. But the United States has effectually prevented that by its high tariff policy which has prevented any great excess from

FIRST DECORATIONS FOR MILITARY BALL PLACED AT COLISEUM

Officers and Cadets Work Under Committee for Opening Formal.

Work on decorations of the Coliseum for the Military Ball Friday night began Tuesday afternoon and will be in full swing Wednesday, it was announced at the military department yesterday. R. O. T. C. officers and cadets are in charge of the work under the supervision of the decorations committee.

The United States flag will be hung in the top of the building as in past Military Balls. It will extend approximately the full length of the ceiling, with blue drapes continuing the color scheme on the sides. From the edge of the blue covering, red and white streamers will be hung, reaching most of the way to the balcony.

A series of red and white stripes is to be draped from the balcony to the floor, with an opening between each group of thirteen stripes. The arch above the stage will be covered by a white-starred blue drape, while the orchestra will be placed on the west side of the dance floor, following the usual custom.

According to Crissy, the decorations committee is considering an amplifying system that will make it possible to hear the music from any part of the floor.

TUITION SCHOLARSHIP BLANKS GO BEGGING

Only Fifteen Have Filed For Next Semester Prize Awards.

The University of Nebraska finds itself in the position of a person who has money to give away with nobody to accept it.

Tuition scholarship blanks in the arts and science college have been available for several days and so far only fifteen students have made applications. There are more second semester scholarships to be awarded than there are people who have applied, school authorities stated.

Anyone who has at least sophomore standing may apply for a scholarship. Awards will be made on the basis of scholarship and the need of the student. Application forms may be secured at the office of deans of each college, or from the office of the dean of student affairs. They must be returned before Dec. 10.

Prof. Lane W. Lancaster is chairman of the committee which will pass on the applications.

ENGLAND'S RETURN TO GOLD STANDARD REMOTE SAYS FLUX

Convocation Speaker Points Out Need for Domestic Price Stability.

Declaring that the prevailing opinion of persons in authority in England at present seems to prefer domestic stability of prices to stability in the rate of foreign exchange, Alfred W. Flux, assistant secretary to the statistical department of the British Board of Trade and eminent English economist, speaking before approximately 400 students and faculty members at the all-university convocation in the Temple Tuesday morning, saw little possibility for restoration of the gold standard in England in the near future.

Analyzing the breakdown of the British gold standard in the fall of 1931, Mr. Flux emphasized the world trade depression as the fundamental cause, but attributed the immediate crisis which forced the action of Sept. 21, 1931 to the failure of the system of German reparations payments made with money borrowed from the United States and Europe to perpetuate itself.

As the result of the trade depression which began in the fall of 1929, two years before the breakdown of the gold standard, Mr. Flux explained Great Britain suffered reduction in the three chief sources of revenue with which she had met the annual excess of imports over exports: Revenue from foreign investments, shipping and banking and insurance.

Dump Funds in London.

As distrust of the financial situation grew, he continued, all countries began converting investment funds into short term money and pouring it into the London short term money market and London assumed the responsibility for making these funds available to lending countries on short notice.

Then with the Hoover moratorium on intergovernmental debts and reparations and the parallel agreement covering commercial loans which resulted in the freezing up of all foreign investments and deposits in Germany, the drain on London credits began. Germany and the smaller European countries who had banked with her turned to London for the sale of bonds to raise immediately necessary funds, while other countries began drawing on their London accounts.

The process gained speed with

Marriage of Former Students Is Annulled

Betty McMillan Goman, former university student suing for annulment of her marriage, Monday told how her college romance had come to an end after her husband has confessed fabricating a story of a job in South America, in order to hasten her marriage.

Goman, also a former student in the university, went with her to New York where they were married. When it came time for his boat to sail for South America, he confessed that the story of the job was a hoax. The marriage was annulled by a Hastings court.
