SOCIETY FORMULATES PLANS TO STIMULATE STUDENT ENTHUSIASM

Browne Says Spirit Lacking When Football Season Is Completed.

In order to stimulate student interest in basketball, Coach Browne and the Innocents society have formulated plans to promote attendance of the pep organizations, the band, and the entire student body at the games, it was announced Tuesday.

"Nebraska students have the impression that their university is a one sport school, and when the football season is over, school spirit dies. This lack of school spirit has been reflected in the teams. Working on this assumption, I have asked the Innocents and the pep organizations to help stimulate student interest in basketball," Coach Browne declared.

A large section has been reserved for the Corn Cobs and Tassels. They will attend the game in uniform and sit in this section. Art Pinkerton, Innocent in charge of promoting basketball interest, stated that the band planned to attend the games in full force and had worked out entertainment to put on between the halves.

There will always be two cheer leaders at the game in uniform according to announcement released by Jack Minor, head cheer leader. The Innocents society will have banners and posters printed for the games which will be displayed in the coliseum and over the campus before the games. They will be similar to those used during the football season, Pinkerton declared.

Col. W. H. Oury Was Partner in First Bookstore Operated on Uni Campus

"Way back in '93, in the dim basement of University hall there was opened, one winter morning, the first bookstore of the University of Nebraska. In charge of the store were two energetic young university students in their freshman year. One of these young men was none other than W. H. Oury, better known today as Colonel W. H. Oury, commandant of the military department of the University of Nebraska.

Working on the theory that students were desirous of paying less for their textbooks than they had been in the past, the two students had obtained permission to open the new bookstore and to sell books at a lower rate to the student body.

Business flourished, relates Colonel Oury, and soon school supplies were added, making the income even greater.

"We made one mistake, tho," smiled the colonel, "when we began selling drill uniforms during the second and third years. It was not a profitable venture, and we lost money."

He stated in a letter to the committee in charge that he will be in Lincoln to check out a suit at the time of the game. UNIVERSITY SECURES ESTIMATES AS BASIS FOR LOAN FROM RFC

Announcement Reveals That Construction Will Add To Dormitory.

University officials have been getting estimates on which to base an application for a $250,000 loan from the Reconstruction Finance corporation with which to construct further units of the new dormitory it was revealed Tuesday in connection with the announcement that 15 million dollars worth of Reconstruction Finance projects are hanging fire in Nebraska.

Money secured from the federal government thru the Reconstruction Finance agency established by the last session of congress bears only three percent interest, whereas the money borrowed from the state school fund to construct the present dormitory carries an interest charge of 5 percent. Altho the present structure is only partially occupied, officials figure that with money borrowed at the low interest rate it would be advantageous to complete the structure and make residence in the dormitory compulsory for freshmen women students.

Change in Law.

Prof. Clark E. Mickey, head of the civil engineering department of the university, declared that some change in the state law would probably be necessary to bring some of the money here. Under the provision of the Reconstruction Finance corporation act, money that is loaned to states or municipalities must be repaid from rentals or service charges from the enterprises for which the borrowed money is used rather than from taxes or assessments. A state law would thus need to be passed to authorize state agencies and municipalities to borrow the money on this basis, Prof. Mickey indicated.

It is understood that the purpose of the money is largely to
