MISS REYNOLDSON IS SPEAKER AT VESPERS

Tells Group of Students They Can Promote Good Will in World.

"As students here on the campus, we can study international problems, the machinery for international conferences, such as the World Court; we can become acquainted with students of other races in our university, and we can carry on correspondence with young people in other countries." These were the suggestions given by Miss Ada Reynoldson, instructor in the history department, in her talk at Vespers Tuesday on "Student Relationship to International Affairs and Good Will."

Miss Reynoldson spoke of some of the organizations which are attempting to promote good will between the nations, such as the convention at Buffalo last year, the Youth Crusade and the part it played in the disarmament conference, and in our own university, the Pan-Pacific conference, and the disarmament conference held last year.

She mentioned the Student Movement house in London of which she is a member. It is a sort of club to which anyone interested in world affairs may belong. Lectures by the finest of speakers are given, discussions are held, and often whole evenings are spent in the study of the culture of a certain group of people such as the Egyptians, Welsh and others.

Ruth Cherny presided at the meeting, and Jane Robertson made announcements.

Two Mrs. Frasers, One Firm, the Other Fluff, Lend Interest to Current Play

"The First Mrs. Fraser" a drama written by Sir John Ervine, which deals with three Mesdames Fraser, but concerns itself primarily with the first, is being presented by the University Players this week before appreciative audiences.

Mr. Ervine undertook a study of divorce and its effects on the modern English family, of which he did an excellent job. In his play, he conveys some of the suffering, the anguish and the unhappiness that it holds for all the parties, at least for the innocent ones. And in addition gives a hint of the satisfaction of this system.

Clara Christensen, taking the lead as the first Mrs. Fraser, gave an excellent performance, portraying the remarkable woman. Why James Fraser sought a divorce is difficult to understand, but very easy to see why he wanted to come back after a brief and strange interlude with his "second." Of course Mrs. Fraser, the first, was supposed to be that sort of a woman but Miss Christensen made it much easier to understand her. She presents Mrs. Fraser as a woman of intelligence, unusual charm, and a calm demeanor even under the most trying circumstances. Being restful and firm she is a dutiful wife, a loyal mother and a gracious sweetheart.

Harlan Easton took the part of Mr. Fraser and makes it apparent why he could seek an interlude. In his role, he is an aggressive Scottish business man, prone to be unscrupulous at times, often overbearing and the most abused man in the world.

The second Mrs. Fraser, for from the "first," was so inconspicuous James sought a divorce quental, futile yet vicious bit of a fluff who entered his life and made it miserable for several years. Miss Posey did fine work in this part. Thoroughly obnoxious as the suitor of the first Mrs. Fraser, was Robert Reade. The light humorous moments of the show were injected by Herbert Yenne, assuming the part of one of the Fraser children, and also by the satirical remarks of the other two children, all at the expense of Mr. Fraser. The cast:
