SPECTATOR EDITORS

Campus Paper Subjected To Investigation By Student Board.

NEW YORK. (CNS.) Editorial troubles which have dogged the Columbia Daily Spectator more than a year this week failed to dampen the editors' ardent crusading spirit, although they well knew that a petition was being circulated in an effort to secure their removal.

Arthur J. Lelyveld, editor-inchief, and Arthur J. Geiger, editorial associate, were the particular objects of the petition, which was said to bear the signatures of many students who objected to Spectator's recurring attacks on athletics, fraternities and school politics.

Spectator already is being subjected to an investigation conducted by the Student Board, but to all their critics, Lelyveld and Geiger simply turned to the Bible, Lelyveld and Geiger expressed with an average of "B." themselves as highly pleased with the attention they received from the Jester.
