AMANDA HEPPNER TELLS LEAGUE OF TRAVELS ABROAD

Dean of Women Talks to Legislative Society Thursday.

Miss Amanda Heppner, dean of women, spoke Thursday at the legislative League at the Y. W. C. A. describing her travels abroad. She chose as her subject of lecture, "Glimpses of the Orient," which constituted the main portion of the program.

Tea was served after the group had been shown the building. Pastel colored appointments of table and the centerpiece, a black bowl of ferns, sweetpeas, snapdragons and jonquils introduced a spring motif. Eleven lighted tapers, pastel shaded, in low black holders surrounded the floral piece, and were symbolical of the eleventh biennial session of the league.

Mrs. J. S. Steele and Mrs. Crist Anderson presided at the table. The hostess committee included Mrs. L. D. Spence, Mrs. Charles C. Larsen, Mrs. J. W. Lundy, Miss Alpha Lundy, Mrs. Steele, Mrs. Slaymaker, Mrs. W. L. Purdy and Mrs. Anderson. Mrs. Spence acted as courtesy member of the committee introducing the guests.

The meeting next Thursday afternoon which will be held in Carrie Belle Raymond hall. Miss H. Alice Howell, who is the head of the dramatic department, will give a dramatic reading. The chairman is to be Mrs. W. H. McGaffin.

they have been able to carry them out well in regular lineup.

Henry Bauer is still unable to suit up because of his sore shoulder resulting from a dislocation which he sustained last week. He is expected to assume the regular quarterback role which he played two years ago. He is also doped to be the best of the passers on the squad.

More college graduates in nudist colonies that have received official recognition have come from Harvard than from any other institution.

"Back to the Farm Movement" Isn't New to Ag Graduates of Iowa State

AMES, Ia.—The "back to the farm movement" isn't new to graduates of the agricultural division of Iowa State college.

Each year a considerable number of the men who receive agricultural degrees from the college put their knowledge of scientific farming to practical use, either by returning to their fathers' farms or by acquiring farms to operate themselves. In spite of low farm prices and other aspects of the agricultural situation which might appear discouraging, they believe in farming.

Their reasons, according to information recently acquired by Prof. R. M. Vitquain of the agricultural division, vary all the way from personal preference for the farmer's life to belief that farming is the surest occupation under present conditions. It is an interesting fact that, of Iowa State graduates of the last two years who are now farmers, a high percentage ranked among scholastic leaders while they were in school.

One student, who joined his father on a farm following his graduation last year, says, "The other fellow may have his city life—I'll take mine out with the cows and the sheep and the growing crops." Another student says that "I am farming because I really enjoy the work with crops and livestock. Though I'm not making lots of money now, I have a job to keep me busy and confidence that times are going to improve."

A graduate of last June has gone back to the parental farm to become a partner with his father. "We are solvent," he reports, "with all taxes and interest paid, and quite a sum of cash ready for emergencies."

Another June graduate philosophizes thus: "My immediate reason for returning to the farm—three square meals a day and a job that will last as long as there are pigs and steers and people to eat pork and beef. But there's another viewpoint. How many brand new college graduates can assume management of $30,000 enterprises (even at depression prices)? We have 270 acres, 4 horses, 40 cattle, 300 hens, 275 hogs. And I run this little world. I must admit that at times we farmers have run our worlds badly, but we're not the only factories that have overproduced."

The first annual mustache raising contest which bids fair to become one of the most famous institutions at Loyola university, will start this week. First prize, a new silk topper, will be awarded on April Fool's day.

Statistics show that bad checks at the rate of seventy-five a day were passed at Michigan university last year.
