MINISTER COMMENTS ON UNIVERSITY CUT

Rev. Wyland Scores House For Considering Beer Before Education.

Rev. Benjamin F. Wyland, pastor of First Plymouth Congregational church, expressed his opinion Sunday concerning the university cut, saying that Nebraska is soon to see the "unbelievable" ordering of an expenditure of $200,000 "to bring back beer," while refusing to spend "an extra cent for the University of Nebraska."

The cost of assembling a constitutional convention to vote on the repeal of the eighteenth amendment will cost $200,000, Rev. Mr. Wyland pointed out, and he is unable to understand why "the wet who, in decision as to whether the university or beer gets the $200,000, gives it to the beer."

Economy is Forgotten.

Economy and financial stringency does not fall from legislative lips when talking about beer but "only when higher education is involved do you hear it," he stated. "How can legislative logic sustain the contention that a bankrupt or debt-ridden farmer can afford 25 cents a day for beer, but cannot afford 24 cents a year out of each $100 paid in taxes for the extra half million dollars needed by the university?"

Rev. Mr. Wyland questioned his audience by saying, "What kind of legislative logic is it that will permit the brewers to take $1,000,000 a year out of Nebraska pockets for beer, but will not permit the University of Nebraska to take 79-100ths of a mill out of every $1,000 in valuation? Why should we prefer beer to university? Why should we vote beer to our students, instead of properly financed higher education? Why open a saloon and close a classroom? Also," he emphasized, "why give employment to bartenders and create unemployment for professors and instructors?"
