Only One College Sustains Heavy Losses in California Earthquake

By College News Service. LOS ANGELES.—Of more than a score of colleges in southern California, only one sustained heavy losses in the recent earthquake, a survey conducted by College News Service revealed this week.

And altho the main building at Compton Junior college was almost completely destroyed, no deaths or injuries were reported.

Compton is the suburb of Los Angeles where most of the business section was razed by the earth shocks, and while the junior college buildings were not entirely demolished, preparations were being made this week to hold classes in tents and other temporary structures. A loan from the Reconstruction Finance corporation is being sought for new buildings.

Long Beach Junior college, which was nearer the center of the earthquake, escaped almost unscathed, despite the fact that scenes of havoc and destruction were visible on every hand. The tower of the Wilson high school, with which the college is associated, was badly cracked, but it was planned to resume classes in both the high school and college on March 27.

On that date, some of the space in the college building will be assigned to classes of the Long Beach Polytechnic high school, which was completely destroyed, and a number of night classes will be started in order to prevent crowding. Long Beach school authorities also were hoping to obtain an R. F. C. loan. Other colleges throughout the southwest suffered only minor damage or none at all.

At the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, damage was confined to a few cracked walls, broken plaster and a few fallen chimneys, the latter being reported by several fraternity houses. There was no interruption in classes, and all buildings of the university were declared safe for occupancy.

No damage was reported at the University of California at Los Angeles, and classes were held as usual, altho intermittent tremors continued for several days.

As a part of the Los Angeles city school system, which must repair or replace a number of buildings, the Los Angeles junior college was closed for one week. It occupies the former site of the University of California at Los Angeles, but practically no damage was reported.

Large numbers of students in the Long Beach and Compton areas assisted in relief work, which was quickly organized with the help of a detachment of marines and men of the United States fleet

Winners Not to Be Revealed Until New Cornhusker Is Published.

Votes in the Cornhusker Coed contest which was sponsored by the 1933 Cornhusker staff have been counted before a faculty committee and certified by Prof. Gayle C. Walker, director of the school of journalism, R. W. Spencer announced yesterday.

The five girls who received the highest number of votes will be featured in a unique arrangement in connection with the Queen's section of the book. Their photographs will be in tint block, or natural color.

Over four million votes were cast for the five winners, or an average of four hundred thousand for each Cornhusker Coed. Their names, however, will not be revealed until the 1935 book is published, Spencer asserted.

Votes for the contest were cast by each purchaser of the new year book. This is the first year that any such a feature has been run in the Cornhusker and it is a feature that will enhance the value of the book, the editor believes.
