Prelude to Three Meetings.

FIRST day classes have been held; textbooks, assignments, supplies, and the general paraphernalia incidental to the formal beginnings of the academic year are being obtained; school, in short, is definitely under way.

Coupled with the beginnings of the scholastic processes are other beginnings in the realm of activities, and the week just starting is to see inaugural meetings of three organizations whose work of the year holds great possibilities. The organizations are the Student council, the Interfraternity council, and the Interclub council.

Here, in three representative bodies, is a cross-section of student activity. If the organizations do not fit that definition, then they have additional work for the year to make themselves such a cross-section. Given these three groups, a full school year in which to work, and a realization of the work confronting them, there is no reason activities of the present school year should not be outstanding in a host of respects.

Each of the organizations mentioned will be dealt with more at length as their formal work gains momentum, but even now a sketchy outline of some of the problems to be faced might be appropriate.

FRATERNITY (Continued)

Nominally at the very center of all student extracurricular enterprises, the council has greater potentialities than any other representative body on the campus. It is not by any means, in its present form, a body capable of realizing those potentialities, for past years have shown intrinsic faults in its composition. To discover and supercede those faults should be among the first of the problems claiming the council's attention this year.

In addition, a project carried over from last year is still far from completion—the proposed student activity tax. A great deal of effort has been put forth on this plan, but there remains the crucial task of successfully presenting it before the board of regents. The activity tax scheme must be allowed to die; it should claim a major share of the council's attention.

Perhaps third should be listed the general topic "coordination of activities." Part of such work will be incidental to efforts bent on reorganization, and the endeavor to put the activities tax into operation. But above and beyond these projects, serious efforts to unify and coordinate all activities should be undertaken by the council. The form and direction such an effort will take cannot be determined until the temper of the new council members is better known, but there are numerous separate projects which might be undertaken to realize a greater coordination among activities.

There are, too, a host of other affairs which might well follow the conclusion of the council's major concerns. Investigation and study of the grading system, with a view toward incorporating at Nebraska some of the proposals gleaned from last spring's regional conference, would be a work deserving of support. And if the Student legislators even set up adequate machinery for dealing with problems heretofore mentioned, other concerns will suggest themselves for additional work.

SECOND of the organizations scheduled to get under way this week is the Interfraternity council, a glimpse of whose problems was given in these columns a few days ago. Assuming major proportions in the minds of the Greek delegates is, of course, the immediate concern of rushing.

The furor of rush week is just over, and it is natural that rushing should be the first thought of the Interfraternity representatives. A glimpse of the pledge lists printed in today's paper, however, may suggest to the thoughtful that there are other, more fundamental concerns for the body to deal with.

Fraternities on the Nebraska campus are not alone in being required to meet the problem of adjustment; a similar effort has been and is being made on many fronts. But to realize the particular way in which the fraternity problem must be met, to realize, indeed, the whole nature of the problem itself, ought to furnish material for some concentrated interfraternity council work.

It is necessary, of course, that the council make itself able to deal with these affairs of grave concern to fraternities. To do so, as previously suggested, this body, too, needs first of all a profound readjustment of its scheme of organization. It is not possible to emphasize too much the absolute necessity of this point. Substitution of a scheme of representation based on experience and ability for the present superficial and very detrimental-political basis simply must be the immediate concern of the Greeks.

After that is accomplished and it must be accomplished with all speed if the council is to be capable of dealing with the larger problems of fraternity welfare—then the way is opened for treatment of financial and structural problems. Cooperation with the alumni council will show the way toward this treatment, and for the present the Greeks will have their hands full with the immediate problems outlined.

THE third organization beginning its year's work this week is the Interclub council. Sponsored originally by the Student council for the betterment of activities among unaffiliated students, this body has already shown its worth by bringing many new students into the circle of extracurricular interests.

Last year this group's program was circumscribed by the newness of the organization, although even so progress was made in getting an interest in intramural sports aroused. This year, even more may be accomplished.

The fundamental difficulties the Interclub organization has experienced thus far in its history have centered around the inability to effect any sort of permanent framework. The Interclub council is constructed on delegations from various rooming houses, and the composition of these nuclei is constantly shifting. To effect a workable solution of this problem ought to be of basic concern to the Interclub delegates.

Hand in hand with this endeavor, of course, will be the obligation to carry on the good work previously done, and to expand it. If at all successful, this effort should mean that Interclub will find themselves a part of student activities as never before. Student council and Daily Nebraskan support will be enlisted in this cause, as in others previously mentioned, and the Interclub council should have the best year of its existence, with Interclub beginning to understand that they have equal opportunities in activities with wearers of Greek jewelry.

ALL the foregoing is only a sketchy outline, inspired by the imminence of the inaugural meetings of each of these organizations. Even so it has stretched to unseemly length, and that alone should be a hint, a vague indication, of the amount of work the three bodies have ahead of them. It is an ambitious program, of course, for without that sprinkling of ambition it wouldn't be even a plan.

All of the points included, too, may not meet with equal approbation; indeed, it is almost certain that they will not. The broad view, however, impels the conviction that a complete and sincere effort to actualize the plans set forth would be a step toward a much better organization of the activities touched upon, and a tremendous moral advantage in the accomplishment of future projects.

The week brings three meetings. Will those meetings mean the beginning of a year of great work?

Ag College

By Carlyle Hodgkin DOWN BUT NOT OUT. Elmer Park, busy with activities around Ag campus during the past two years, was unable to return to classes this fall. He has been taken to the Bryan Memorial hospital for an operation, and will probably be there for a month or more. No doubt Elmer would be glad to have his Ag College friends call.

SMALL TOWNS POPULAR. The small agricultural towns of the middle west have become a haven for gangsters. The hotter it gets for hold-up men and their gangs around large cities, the more one hears of small-town banks being raided. So frequent have these robberies become that insurance rates for banks in small towns have risen to ten times as much as rates for banks in eastern cities.

AG FEED STATION. Some thirty or more students, both boys and girls, are dining regularly as members of the Ag College Boarding club at the home economics building. They get twenty meals a week for $3.25, and all of them seem to be well nourished and healthy.

The club was started last year and a good number of boys liked the idea from the start. But the girls seemed slow about getting used to it. Perhaps the girls preferred their own cooking. But however that may have been, Miss Park, cafeteria manager, says that the girls have come into the club in good numbers this year. Irene Wendorf, Mildred Tucker and Murray Brawner are student managers.

The club, according to Miss Park is a cooperative affair in which the students do most of their own managing. And each student may work two-and-a-half hours a week if he chooses. His pay for the work will be deducted from that week's board bill.

six boys came out for his junior livestock judging class this fall. That's soft for the boys, for in a livestock team there are five judges and one alternate. The six are just enough to go round. The junior team usually goes to the contest at the Denver Stock Show. But this year there is no Denver show. That's where the rub comes. But there will be a contest at the International at Kansas City again next year—at least one hopes so—and the practice this fall will put these boys in shape to make the junior team next year.

There is a chance that the six boys out for junior judging will get in some actual contests even though there is no Denver show. Mr. Alexander hopes to make an arrangement with the Kansas Ag College so that the two teams can work together. "We might take our boys and go down there for a contest some week-end," he said, "and then the Kansas boys could make the trip up here for another contest. That would not cost much; it would give the boys some good practice, and partially take the place of the Denver contest."
