STUDENTS SUPPORT NAZISM.

(Continued from Page 1.) tion in Germany, Werkmeister replied: "I would say that the predominant number of students, particularly those belonging in sympathy with the Nazi party." Professor Werkmeister talked to a number of students on this point while in Germany. Considerable revolutionary spirit was manifested among the students last fall and in January and February of this year, Doctor Werkmeister said. The impression now is that the students have more or less gotten away from the first radical ideas. They feel that they, as fraternity men, had been among the first to supply membership to the Nazi party, and now, having passed the revolutionary stage, they are already dreaming of the evolutionary or peaceful development of the country. Before the rise of the Hitler party, those students not affiliated with fraternities were frequently members of some political party or youth movement with strong socialistic or communistic leanings.

When asked about militarism in Germany, Doctor Werkmeister declared that there was no compulsory military drill there. "In regard to the militaristic spirit in Germany, I would say that it has been grossly exaggerated," he went on. "The 'Spirit of Potsdam,' of which so much has been heard, is no longer the same."

Professor Werkmeister went on to say that while the marching Hitler troops may give the impression of a military force, they were organized for pure political reasons before the party was in power. In 1920 they were organized as a means of protection for the leaders and speakers of the Nazi party.

"They have had no military drill, and if they march like soldiers, that does not mean that they have fighting qualities. A modern war would require technical equipment which they lack," Doctor Werkmeister declared. Under the treaty of Versailles, the German government is permitted to keep a professional army of 100,000 men.

The question of a monarchy does not even exist in Germany today, according to Werkmeister. He asked an acquaintance how it happened that if Hitler does not have monarchial tendencies the son of the former kaiser belongs to his party. The answer was that he is there, not as the son of the former king, but as any member of the political organization. He has been duly tried, having been forced to sell newspapers on the streets of Berlin, and to live in the barracks with the unemployed. Even now he does not belong to the inner council which directs the party policies.

Questioned about his personal opinion as to the success of the Nazi party, Professor Werkmeister replied: "No part of Germany is typical of the whole. Some regions are still in the revolutionary stages, while others have advanced to the evolutionary development. If the evolutionary course prevails, and if Hitler survives this coming winter, I feel sure that the most unfortunate measures now in force will gradually be abandoned. I believe that Hitler will then remain in power as long as he wishes and that the Hitler regime, because of the powerful constructive influence which it possesses, will rebuild the German nation."

RADICALS ATTACKED BY CALIFORNIA STUDENTS

Members of Student Problem Club Accosted While They Sell Newspaper.

(FROM THE DAILY CALIFORNIAN)

Tear gas bombs, used to rout student salesmen of the Student Outpost, radical publication of the Social Problems club, yesterday not only caused a hurried police riot call, but disclosed that a former member of the club had 'turned traitor.'

Three students, identified as Frank M. Freck '34, formerly prominent in the Problems club, Stanley R. Moss, graduate student, and a third student, as yet unknown, made two attacks upon Student Outpost salesmen at Sather gate yesterday morning.

Alfred J. Van Tassel '34, unsuccessful candidate for A. S. U. C. president last semester, and Julius Rattner '37, were selling the publication both times. The first attack occurred shortly after 10 a. m. when Freck walked up to Van Tassel, president of the club, and carried off several copies.

The second attack, occurring at 11:45 a. m., proved more disastrous than the first, and will be continued this afternoon when members of the Social Problems club file criminal charges against the raiders in the Berkeley courts. Salesmen Make Effort to Defend Themselves.

President Robert G. Sprout, upon his return from Los Angeles, will be asked to conduct a complete investigation of the incident, according to spokesmen for the Problems club, who feel that the tear gas attack cannot be unheeded.

The later rush began when Van Tassel recognized three men walking toward Sather gate as the same ones who had participated in the earlier attack. "Here they come again," he shouted.

Both salesmen prepared to defend their papers and themselves, but proved unable to cope with the added weapon—tear gas, which was squirted into their eyes. Rattner suffered minor bruises when a tear gas bomb, said by the police to be homemade, was thrown at his leg, exploding and spreading glass all over the pavement.

Van Tassel was struck by the attackers, and thrown to the ground, eyewitnesses said. He vainly tried to save copies of the Outpost, with tears running from his inflamed eyes, but to no avail. As spectators swarmed toward the gate, the raiders jumped into a car and sped off.

No Official Complaints Registered by Victims.

Social Problems club members yesterday discussed the advisability of swearing out warrants for the arrest of the three, upon the charges of battery, assault, possession of battery, assault, possession of tear gas, disturbing the peace, and misdemeanors.

Official complaints were not made to university authorities inasmuch as the club had not had time to call a hurried meeting. Consequently, no statements concerning the university were issued.

That the gas bombs were homemade was the theory advanced by Captain Johnson, following hasty examination of the fragments of glass. He suggested that they might have been made in chemistry laboratories.

chemistry department agreed that the chemistry laboratory facilities were ample for the manufacture of such bombs, although there would be little opportunity for students to get by without detection.

Possibility that the idea for the attack might have been obtained from one of the Junior Farce scripts submitted to the Warce judges was suggested last night. A play, written by John M. Eshleman jr. '35 and Louise Jeschke '35, had its second act climax with a tear gas attack upon the Social Problems club.

The scripts of these Farce entries were fairly well circulated among judges, class officials and friends, so that the novel plot might have been based upon this script.

NEBRASKA BIZAD DEAN APPROVES NEW NRA PLAN

Cooperation Necessary.

"I agree with Dean McCrea of Columbia when he says that cooperation between business men and the government will eliminate many business problems," Dean LeRoussignol continued. "I think that the codes, under government supervision, are particularly good points of the NRA, and may result in business groups somewhat resembling the medieval guilds, which can solve the problems peculiar to the individual industries."

"The NRA must be careful, however, that it doesn't go too far in regulating business. The NRA's plans to raise wages and shorten working hours are well-intended, but it must be realized that the business man will have to make greater profits to meet these requirements and still remain in business. Wages are the result of prosperity, and the purchasing power which is the foundation of prosperity must first be established. The cost of doing business, if increased is bound to result in higher prices, and it is doubtful whether the market can stand such an increase at present. It is such problems as these which must bear careful consideration and which require cooperation of government and business men for solution.

"Business schools are making every effort to give their students the necessary business training to avoid or lessen the effects of possible future depressions," Dean LeRoussignol concluded. "The charge that they are glutting the market with students is false. The business school has no control of over-population which, after all, is the cause of much unemployment. As a matter of fact, by keeping the student in college instead of at home and perhaps, in unemployment, the business school and college is really doing much to alleviate the present emergency."

Western University Has First Graduate Courses This Year

LOS ANGELES, (CNS). For the first time in its history, the University of California at Los Angeles is offering graduate work. Opening of the graduate school, this fall climaxes a long fight on the part of the local administration and supporters of the university to obtain authority and funds for a graduate school here. As a result graduate work will be offered by twelve departments, with a limit of 150 as the total number of graduate students this year. A general expansion of the work of the school is planned for future years.

Enrollment at U. C. L. A. this fall dropped slightly below figures for last year, but administration officials greeted this with optimism, pointing out that "last year's excessive enrollment (410) was abnormal, because the lack of opportunity for employment tended to keep young men and women in school, especially in the public schools, and that this year, with the increasing opportunities for employment, we are merely returning to normal."
