Jeering at Cheering.

AUTUMN'S big collegiate show, football, made its introductory bow Saturday as Cornhuskers bull-dogged the Texas Longhorns. Another season, another team, made a good start toward upholding the tradition of Nebraska grid prestige.

It was a game full of surprising moments, fast breaks, and an unexpected display of Nebraska reserve power. The crowd reflected the color of "football days," and the weather accommodated itself to the opening season over which football is

There was, in short, a football game Saturday. Satisfactory tho the score was, there was an element that marred the perfection of the game, and that element might well be charged to Nebraska students. It was the anemia that caused cheering to lack any sort of real fervor. Aside from the spontaneous medley of sound that always arises from an excited football crowd, yells were weak and without heart. Student cheers were dead.

Yell leaders themselves may be partially to blame, for all are relatively experienced, yet to them cannot be attributed the whole of the weakness. Students made comparatively little effort to raise their voices above an inaudible mumble, and the result was pitiful, for the students themselves must act as nucleus for the generation of enthusiasm in the other fans.

After a whole-hearted and very successful Friday night rally it was a bit disheartening to find Saturday's spirit at such low ebb-if vocal results are an evidence of spirit. Corn Cobs were noticeable, as usual, for their lack of any kind of adequate cheering organization, and perhaps they might be prevailed upon to exert themselves a little more. In any case, as things stand now, student enthusiasm, specifically student cheering, needs an injection of something calculated to improve it.

It's more than a little futile, of course, for the Nebraskan to raise its voice in this matter, for "after all, we won didn't we?" Unfortunately, that misses the whole point, but to convince the student body that it does is in a class with the beating of dead horses, for both are extremely futile.

gun, and the Nebraskan has had its little say. Onward, steam-roller of Cornhusker prestige! We take satisfaction in telling you to go on. Oh Thou Samson, for we know you will anyway.

Cross Section

Of Youth.

ACTIVITY almost spectacular at times was the distinguishing mark of the week just closed. A wealth of things were happening, and now on the pause that Sunday affords a backward glance is full of interest, for it constitutes a view that is almost a cross-section of university work and play. Today marks the close of school's fourth teek, and the first football game is over. What did the week hold?

Actual schoolwork, the constant business of asses and assignments, stands at the head of any such list proposing to reveal a cross-section of the undergraduate life of a university. Always to be seckoned with as the primary and fundamental concern of every student, the steady work of forgual education dominated this, the fourth week, as t ultimately dominates the whole of all the school weeks. Last individual adjustments were well out of the way by the beginning of the week, and both students and professors took a new grip on their work as the prospect of first quizzes loomed not for in the future.

IN the realm of less constant concerns, in extra-Curricular activities and all the other fields inperent in university life but not included under ormal classwork alone, the week opened with a uror that was to extend almost thruout the sevenday period. Football was the dominant note, and

A movement for student participation in the the athletic ticket drive started the week with a sigorous push.

Color Blindness Is Beyond Relief From Training or Practice

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okl.-Color blindness is one defect now defi-nitely listed as beyond relief from training or practice, optometrists declare.

"Color blindness is caused by formations of the eye structures," mays Dr. E. B. Alexander, secretary of the Oklahoma state board of op-"It would be no more sensible for a color blind person to recognize colors that for a deaf person to recognize sounds. Fortunately, few people are color blind. Many merely have weakened perception for one or more colors, fre-quently red."

Besides true color blindness, there is a temporary incapacity to establish color, produced by dis-ease and occasionally by the use of certain drugs. In some diseases of the brain and spine, the loss of color vision is an early and import-CAPITAL CONFERENCE ant symptom and probably occurs more frequently than is supposed in temporary disturbances of these parts, optometrists have found.

NRA consumer's drive came in for its share of attention, and in an allied field, the university division of the community chest workers entered into their campaign for funds.

That Rhodes scholarship candidates could file their applications was an announcement early in the week, and a perfect contrast between seriousness and absurdity was seen the same day when Mortar Boards announced plans for "Hello Day."

Directory copy was posted in Social Sciences building thruout most of the week, and the hall was crowded with students checking their names and addresses. In the military department junior R. O. T. C. officers received their appointments, as did members of the staff for the year's Cornhusker. Yell leaders were picked, and a faculty member of the psychology department advised the reading of detective stories to soothe jangling

The Nebraskan presented the first issue of its new rotogravure section on Sunday, and the next the times has, however, been otherday coliseum drapes were glimpsed for the first time. Work on the decorations progressed all week, and a climax to early Tassel ticket sales was reached in a rally at Carrie Bell Raymond hall Tuesday evening.

The same evening the Interfraternity council met and passed drastic reorganization plans, and the Interclub council took steps to perfect its organization for the year. John K. Selleck, athletic department head, was revealed as "Uncle John" when the Tassels cheered him at one of their noon pep luncheons. Tuesday brought the total of fraternity houses reporting robberies to

The list of delegates to the new alumni Interfraternity council was released Wednesday, and on the same day it was learned that plans were under way to provide junior chamber of commerce membership for men belonging to the commercial club on the campus. Work on Cornhusker picture-taking began, and Prof. E. F. Schramm was elected to represent the Nebraska Interfraternity council at the national Greek meeting in Chicago over the coming week-end. Intramurals got under way with the beginning of soccer games, and the Ag college's dairy cattle judging team placed ninth in an intercollegiate contest at Waterloo, Ia.

Student council meeting brought announcement that election of junior and senior class officers and the honorary colonel will be held Oct. 24, and the University Players announced the cast for their first play, opening Monday.

SO it went thruout the week. The first rally was held; an administrative order pointed out that food and other petty supplies, could not be sold on the campus, while some protest was made by students; block seat reservations in the stadium were drawn Thursday night; freshmen were reminded to wear their red caps, and the brown derby was awarded by law freshmen.

Climaxing the whole turmoil of activity, the week-end brought the first ag mixer, several house parties, and of course-above all-the Nebraska-Texas football game.

It's not a fair sample of a university week, perhaps, for some of the things happening come only once during the year. But the review of this last period, the fourth week of school, approaches a glance at the campus life-confused and intense. The week, like all the other weeks, was charged with a pulsing fervor that is the mark of the undergraduate, the eternal youth.

Wanted:

Able Seniors.

Y/ITH the Interfraternity council reorganization at least approved, the next step for the Greek chapters is selection of the senior men who are to represent them on the revitalized council. Without careful selection of able men the whole scheme fails to fulfill its purpose to the best advantage blame for preventing us from and the council is left not much better off than catching that last important state-

Each fraternity chapter, then, has the responsibility of naming for its delegate a senior man to serve actively on the council, and a juntor apprentice who will attend meetings with his senior associate and serve as an alternate. Both men, obviously, must be capable, intelligent, and above all elee must possess foresight enough to be able to see beyond the immediate problems of their own fraternity.

Both men, too, must be willing to work. Since committees will be filled by senior men they must be seniors who have not succumbed to the lamentable habit of "taking it easy" during the last undergraduate year.

A good example has been and is being set by this year's seniors who have attended meetings thus far, and with that good example bofere them, there is no reason the tradition of idle seniors cannot be replaced once and for all by the tradition of seniors interested enough in their work on the council to make it an efficient and praiseworthy body. An excellent beginning has been made in that direction, and to make it a permanent part of council work it is only necessary that each Greek house on the campus select for its council representative the best possible man.

When you meet Monday night, Greeks, get your men selected. And make them capable of rising to the new standard that has been set on the Inter-

CONTEMPORARY COMMENT

Decline of the Socialist Party.

The recent desertion of the so-cialist party by two of its leading members, Upton Sinclair and Heywood Broun, is a very striking indication of the trend of the times as well as an echo of the resounding defeat administered to the socialist party in the campaign last

For the past decade, there has been agitation in the United States for a strong third party, a party of the proletaria such as the labor party in England. The trend of In both England and the United States, the trend has been toward a two-party system with a strong liberal party lined up Miss Smrha will have their hands against a strong conservative full, even with committees apparty. In England, the party of pointed, for one of the big jobs of the middle, the liberal party, has dropped out of sight and the conservative labor parties have come to represent the two points of political viewpoints. In the United States, the liberals have seized control of the decadent democratic party and the third party, the socialist, has faded into obscurity.

The masses, discouraged with the leadership of the conservative republican party, did not turn to Thomas but to the new democratic leadership under Roosevelt. The democratic party has largely lived up to the expectations of the element. Greater changes in the direction of liberalism have taken place in the last few months than at any time in the history of the country. The true liberals in the socialist party have begun to realize the change and have turned to the party which can translate their views into political action.

The charges of Sinclair and Broun that the socialist party has become a closed group in the nature of a religion, with a certain number of persons considering themselves among the "converted" and everyone else being "on the outside," are largely true. This spirit is evidenced in socialist meetings everywhere and in the socialist press. Not long ago we witnessed a Mooney mass meeting in which the tactics used were much the same as those used in a religious revival meeting. The so cialist party, the answer seems to be, has been driven into a corner and is trying desperately to keep itself alive. The tactics used are those which are always indicative of a dying faction. It's beginning to look as though socialism is dead —long—live socialism!—Michigan

High School Girls Confide in Chums; Fear Their Parents

AMES, Ia.-High school girls don't confide in their parents because they fear their parents will think their problems "silly."

This is the conclusion drawn by Dr. Elizabeth Hoyt, professor of economics and home management at Iowa State College, from a study recently completed by Hazel Hatcher of Chillicothe, Mo., graduate student.

Though mothers ranked highest as confidants, only 30 percent of the girls represented in the study put them first. And father was far down the list-eleventh among twelve, between the family doctor and the minister. Chums were second, then "parents," sisters and teachers.

Another black mark for father as the advisor to the high school girl was registered by rural girls, who left him out of their lists almost entirely. Rural girls were shown to prefer teachers as confidants, the girls in cities ranked mothers first. Relations with parents was the problem most frequently listed by girls of both classes as major. "Occasionally girls are worried by the relation of one parent to the other," Dr. Hoyt said, "and they ought to feel able to talk with parents about so personal a prob-lem. If parents don't recognize this need the child is left to suffer, often needlessly."

FARMERS FORMAL.

Two big events occur on Ag campus annually. One is Farmers' Formal and the other is Farmers' Fair. The date for Farmers' Formal is Oct. 27, Phillip Henderson was elected chairman of the Farmers Formal committee at Ag club's meeting last Wednesday night.

Assisting Henderson in preparations for the big student party will be Helen Smrha, president of Home Ec club. The formal is sponsored co-operatively by the two clubs, the girls being particularly concerned with selecting the Farmers' Formal queen.

It is no small responsibility to organize such an activity as the Ag student formal. Henderson and the chairman is to keep the committee at work. Who the students appointed to committees will be, no one will know for a few days. But whoever they are, they are in a large measure responsible for the success of Farmers Formal. from the chairman down, is alert

Last fall, a heavy vote for the socialist candidate, Norman Thom-as, was predicted: it did not ma-past. If they go to sleep on the past. If they go to sleep on the job ....? MIXERS THAT MIX.

> Student social activities on Ag ampus began last week. The Activities building was the scene of a 4-H club party Friday night and of the first mixer Saturday night. Ag club sponsored the first stu-dent dance.

> What the mixers and parties on Ag campus will actually bring to the students this year in the way of entertainment and enjoyment is yet to be seen. It depends, perhaps, on whether they get off to a good start, whether a democratic and congenial spirit prevails at the first view. And there are many degrees of that thing we call conginiality or friendly spirit.

Once last winter there was a kid party, or maybe it was a ragand-tatters party, at the Activities building which, I think, was unprecedented in the history of Ag college. The students, of their own accord, put on special dances, games between dances, pulled stunts and tricks. So unusual was the enthusiam of the group that Prof. H. P. Davis, who has probably chaperoned as many parties as any faculty member on the campus, was led to remark that he had never before seen a group of students, entirely on their own initiative, get out on the floor and play games between dances. It is hard to tell just what was the source of all the enthusiasm.

Perhaps it was the novelty of the customs. Perhaps the students were just feeling good. At any rate, the more of the that friendliness, and spirit, and enthusiasm that are present at parties and year, the more actual notify the already enlightened pro- good times there will be for Ag

It's so grand that one almost has to say something about it, and yet one scarcely knows what to say except that it is grand. And everybody knows that.

But these early autumn days with the leaves just beginning to take on new shades of color, and the days warm and quiet, and the night and early mornings cool and brisk, are one of the things that people can and do enjoy. It doesn't matter if you have a Packard or have to walk, you can enjoy these days just as much. In fact, you can enjoy the excellence of day more when you walk then when you have to drive.

Such autumn weather as this has one of two possible affects on the several thousand students who are just getting established or reestablished in university. It may make them drowsy, give them spring fever, make them dream out of the window instead of listening to the instructor rave on about simple reflexes, or overor ameobold motion, or tones. predicate adjectives, or coefficients of variability, or bills of rights, or atomic weights, or quilt design, or what not. They decide that the weather is too nice to work, and so they don't work.

And then there are students who will be so inspired by these beautiful days that they will want to get out and turn the world upside down-the football players will be among these. There will be some students inspired to work harder by these splendid autumn days, but likely their number will be decidedly in the minority. And when one is discussing the influence of weather on the stu-dents, the influence of these moonlight nights must not be overlooked. For that is tremendous. Two moods may dominate one as these autumn days wane away into winter. The one is a mood of quietness, of restfulness, of con-tentment after the summer's work is done. That is the mood of a farmer whose fields are ready for winter, whose barns and sheds are well filled with hay and grain for the stock, and whose house is well filled with food and clothing for him and his family thru the winter. It is akin to the mood that one feels after doing an honest and hard day's work. The other mood is less pleasant to contemplate, the perhaps it may be almost as common. It is a feeling of goneness, of empti-ness, of lonliness. The year is dy-The leaves are dying. The ing. flowers are dying. Everything is dying, and there is kind of a sin-ister dread in the wole atmosphere. This is the mood of a farmer whose crops burned in the hot wind, or were ruined by hall, or are almost worthless because of the low price. It is the mood of the man who, viewing the com-ing winter, knows that his barns and sheds are not full, and that his cave and pantry are not full. This is, very likely, the mood of a stu-dent who is back in school without visual means of getting food ten days hence, who knows that in order to get thru the year he will have to sacrifice all parties, dances, shows, and dates, who will be lucky if he can get thru at all . . but my subject was weather, and what I had to say was that the weather is grand.
