GIVEN SANCTION
BY CHANCELLOR

Extensive Preparations Are Being Made; Tradition Observed Since '17.

Definite sanction of the all university church day, to be held Sunday November 5, was made by Chancellor E. A. Burnett in a statement made public yesterday. Declaring that students should take interest in the religious spirit of the community, the chancellor endorsed the movement as a worthy enterprise.

Make Preparations. Extensive preparations are being made by the churches of Lincoln to receive students this Sunday. The tradition has been observed on this campus since 1917, in which one day in the fall of the school year special services for students have been held.

The complete copy of the chancellor's statement, is as follows: Sunday, November 5, is Go-To-Church Sunday at the University of Nebraska. This is a tradition of long standing at the University and I hope that many students who have not yet identified themselves with a church here will attend the church of their choice this Sunday, thus beginning to take an interest in the religious life of this community.

To each one of you it may have a different meaning, but I desire to pass along to you the suggestion that you attend church somewhere on this Sunday. The Lincoln churches welcome you.

Dignity of Seniors
In Law College Is Enhanced by Cane

Any individuals observed on the campus leaning heavily upon polished wooden canes are not to be regarded as victims of old age. But merely as senior law students perpetuating an old, old custom of the law college by carrying a walking stick during their last year. The stick is regarded as a badge of great dignity and superiority, and to be privileged to carry one is the goal of all law students who, until their senior years are forced to totter around the campus unsupported.

As one senior put it, "We want to be distinguished on the campus." Their canes are the "pride of all senior laws." The practice is taken from old English novels, particularly Dickens', in which a characteristic of the lawyer was that he carried a cane.

In the past senior laws also wore black derbies. This practice was deserted because of economic conditions; but not even the depression wrenched his treasured cane from the senior law!

PLANT ECOLOGY IS SUBJECT OF WEAVER'S TALK

Lecture Is Presented to Professors at Meeting at University Club.

J. B. Weaver, professor of plant ecology at the University of Nebraska and the research associate for the Carnegie Institute Foundation in Washington, D. C., spoke on Tuesday evening before a group of professors at the University club. Mr. Weaver's discussion covered recent material on grasses, wheat and other plant forms of which he is intensely interested.

Depicts Struggle. Relating the results of observations over a period of some years, Mr. Weaver depicted the struggles of the plants in their efforts to solve the problems of life which confronts them all as they start to mature. "Competition to live is kept in the plant world and organization," he said. "It brings about many astonishing developments which are very interesting to study." The growth of one species of plants compared with that of another in a different and varying species is of great interest to a student of plant ecology.

Grasses Crowded Out. The deciduous forests, Mr. Weaver, declares, have crowded out the grasses of differing varieties over a large area. Mr. Weaver, in giving illustrations to emphasize the points he brought out, asserted that the oak forest had as much wood underground as above. Mr. Weaver cited other incidences to confirm his speech.
