Unnecessary Strife.

THE advantages and disadvantages of the Student council's proposal for a series of "varsity parties" are the concern of the correspondent who signs himself "Status Quo" in today's Student Pulse column. His point is that the present system of all-university parties is working well, and he maintains that improvement in the party system could not be achieved by the Student council's proposed arrangement.

As things stand now, it will be remembered, the Coliseum parties are in the hands of the Barb council, as they have been for several years. Under the system advocated in the Student council, control of the parties would pass to the hands of a committee composed equally of Greek and non-Greek students, and twelve has been suggested as the tentative number of members for this committee.

"Status Quo" contends, however, that such a committee is unworkable, and he declares that "constant warfare would be prevailing" between the Barb and Greek members.

There are factors, however, which Status Quo does not take into consideration when he predicts that the committee would be torn with dissension. Chief among them is that the mutual distrust of Barbs and Greeks is heightened to a ridiculous point only when there is something at stake as between two factions. With a committee designated for the purpose of giving representative, informal parties for the whole campus, it is difficult to see what the bone of contention within the committee would be.

The argument for a joint committee assumes, of course, that the members would be reasonably free of the kind of adolescence that sets up a piece of jewelry as something to quarrel about. It is, indeed, the problem of designing machinery to insure the selection of an intelligent committee that the Student council faces in its effort to set up a varsity party series.

Thus far in the discussions no agreement on the kind of machinery has been reached, but that does not mean that solution of the problem is impossible. Why shouldn't a group of students be able to work together for short periods of time in order to provide the campus with parties that do away once and for all with the strife between Greeks and Barbs?

Record Game Figures.

IN spite of the disappointment among the Rose Bowl enthusiasts, the football season left a genial glow when it was learned that the all-time attendance record for home games had been surpassed. The surge to a new record resulted in a total of 111,343 on the attendance books for the five games played in the Cornhusker stadium.

It is when this season's gate is compared with the tournaments for the two preceding years, however, that the record becomes surprising. The 1931 schedule of five games brought 61,011 spectators, and the 1932 total was 63,817 for four games. Measly figures, these, when they are set beside this year's record! The difference is so startling, indeed, that it prompts some wonder at the reason for the phenomenal increase.

Consideration reveals that an outstanding factor during the season just past, not common to either of the two preceding years, was the absence of radio broadcasts. This is the first year during which the Big Six no-broadcast rule has been in effect, and that is undoubtedly one of the factors in the attendance increase. But other conference schools have thus far reported tremendously augmented attendance figures, so there must be other factors involved.

Among the other factors are such things as the popularity of coaches and players and the sheer talent for playing good football that has been displayed in almost every game. Added to that, too, is the undeniable fact that the team won the games. It may be a bitter pill for the most rabid of sports fans to recognize that winning games has a great deal to do with the popularity of a football team in public eyes, but the fact cannot be entirely ignored.

Neither can another outstanding reason for the box-office success of the season be ignored, for it comes under the head of publicity. Ballyhoo has come to be inseparable from football, and it is probably entirely within reason to credit publicity with a considerable share in the season's attendance success.

But all analysis is put to scorn by one simple thing: The weather. Fine "football" weather for game days was probably most important of all in contributing to the attendance increase. That, combined with other things that have been mentioned, accounts for the record-breaking attendance of a "successful" football season.

lead of Jerry Hallam, who falls in love with his Aunt Stella, will also do magnificently. Mr. Sumption says Perkins is a newcomer to the University Players, but he comes with the highest recommendations from Miss Frances McChesney, who formerly was a member of the Players, but is now dramatic coach at Lincoln high school. Perkins' role is also very difficult, but is one ideally suited to his talents.

Hunter Has Leading Role. Armand Hunter portrays the role of Victor, husband of Stella, who partially understands his wife, until the coarse ridicule of his own family blinds him to the truth. His work is also considered very creditable.

Miss Mary Kay Throop, who not long ago appeared as guest artist with the Ottumwa, Ia., players in the title role in "The First Mrs. Fraser" is also included in the cast. Miss Throop has appeared with the University Players on numerous occasions.

Other members of the cast, who combine to make the play a finished production, indeed, include Clara Christiansen, Roy Squires, Irving Hill, Adela Tombrink and Harold Sumption.

Interviews With Ghosts

by Maurice Johnson

This is one of a series of imaginary dialogues concerning the ideal university life. The dialogues will appear at regular bi-weekly intervals.

AND have you anything to say about universities?" I inquired of Napoleon's ghost.

He stood for a long time, staring moodily before him with luminous eyes, his feet apart. "Yes," he finally spoke, "your modern university makes itself absurd by troubling with the instruction of young females!"

"Co-education?" I said. "Why, everybody believes in that, nowadays."

"Nevertheless," said the dead French Emperor, "it is ridiculous, and harms the dignity of the university."

"But times have changed," I reminded him.

He looked at me coldly. "The status of woman will never change. Nature intended women to be our slaves, and, in effect, they are our property. The university needs do nothing for them; their mothers can bring them up in a more fitting manner than a professor."

"Surely women have as much right to learn as men," I said. "Why?" Napoleon asked. "Public education is not suitable for them, as they can never be fitted to act in public. Marriage is all they look to."

"Many women of today, tho," I went on, "have important positions, even in the government."

"That is an evil," he said. "Females should be educated in household and needlework. They should learn to be good housekeepers and homes women. Beyond that they are out of place."

I did not wish to argue with him.

"I made several educational undertakings when I was alive," Napoleon told me. "And the greatest of these was the organization of the university. It was centralized in the head of the state."

"In that," I said, "it must have been similar to the other institutions you founded."

He nodded. "And I am told that the university exists today with rigid state control, most efficient, and little changed. Under my reign military schools also came into being, but they were like stars about my university."

There was a long pause. I thought he would say no more.

Then, "There were no women there!" he added.

"I can believe it," I assured him.

3 about Cigarettes

Not so long ago practically all cigarettes were made by hand

Now, Chesterfields are made by high-speed machines that turn out 750 cigarettes a minute, and the cigarettes are practically not touched by hand.

BY the use of long steel ovens—drying machines of the most modern type—and by ageing the leaf tobacco for 30 months—like wine is aged—Chesterfield tobacco is milder and tastes better.
Only pure cigarette paper—the best made—is used for Chesterfield.

And to make sure that everything that goes into Chesterfield is just right, expert chemists test all materials that are used in any way in the manufacture.

Chesterfields are made and packed in clean, up-to-date factories, where the air is changed every 4½ minutes. The moisture-proof package, wrapped in Du Pont's No. 300 Cellophane—the best made—reaches you just as if you went by the factory door.

In a letter to us, an eminent scientist says:
"Chesterfield Cigarettes are just as pure as the water you drink."
