CREDIT MEANS OF EXCHANGE TREGOE TELLS MERCHANTS

National Authority Speaks To Lincoln Business Men Monday.

SAYS NRA LIQUIDATING

Lecturer Declares Country Not to Live Again as Before 1934.

Credit was portrayed as a medium of exchange for goods, as a substitute for barter, as an alternate for money, and not as a means for seller to load goods on consumer, in a talk before Lincoln business and credit men in Social Science auditorium Monday evening by J. Harry Tregoe, organizer and past president of National Association of Credit men and special lecturer at the University of Southern California at Los Angeles.

Mr. Tregoe started his business career in a wholesale shoe house in Baltimore, Md., and later became credit manager and general financial head of the institution. He was the executive manager of the national credit men's organization for a period of fifteen years during the association's greatest growth and came to be considered the country's greatest authority on commercial credits and finance. In the last six months he has lectured on financial and economic subjects before groups of credit men in all major cities, and is now serving in an advisory capacity to the National Association of Credit Men.

Inattentive to Fundamentals. "Many men going into business do not know about the successful management of business. They don't pay attention to fundamentals. One of these fundamentals is credit and when you abuse credit you pay the price. Every business is based on credit and the trouble lies in not designating credit as money. The average life of a business enterprise is ten years and would undoubtedly be longer if credit were more thoroughly understood."

He explained that credit is not a courtesy a store extends a customer but a medium of exchange, or a promise to pay that a customer gives the creditor. He believes that if this fundamental were more clearly known business would cease carrying so many bad accounts and stop doing the work of a bank.

"Money has a certain determined content. Credit also should have a content as it serves the same purpose as the dollar. The first of these intrinsic values is willingness to pay, the second is ability to pay, and both are toughened with the alloy of capital as a dollar is toughened with an alloy of metal."

Mr. Tregoe stated that no profit is shown until the dollar is in the bank and that promises are not cash. Business should not try to get consumer to buy more than he can afford. Credit extended by a store is not payment for goods but is only a means of exchange and a promise to pay in the future. "I believe," Mr. Tregoe said, "that we will never live again as we did before March 4, 1934. The country is undergoing definite changes. The NRA is in process of liquidation and is gradually shifting down to practicality. There are several changes that must be made to make it completely successful."

"We haven't felt the effect of devaluation as much as we expected but if it perseveres we must. France by its monetary devaluation plan decreased the national debt by 70 percent and so we, too, will feel the effects of our financial change."

"Don't accept counterfeit credit dollars from a man who can't pay and gamble on his ability to pay in the future."

Mr. Tregoe will speak again Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock in Social Sciences building auditorium on "An Analysis of the Psychology of Fear and Confidence in Business, Finance and Credit Control."

For the last two weeks the Ivy day grounds have received a great deal of attention, having been sodded and watered daily in order that the grass may be green for the annual event. Final preparations for the traditional affair were begun yesterday when the throne was partially erected.
