H. J. Young of the Portland Cement association presented a talk Monday to practical arts students on "The Usage and Making of Cement." To make the subject more interesting and effective, Mr. Young used charts and slides.

FORMER STUDENT'S NOVEL IS PRAISED

'Friends and Romans' by Virginia Faulkner Well Reviewed.

"Friends and Romans," a novel written by Miss Virginia Faulkner a former University of Nebraska student, is receiving good notices by eastern critics. The New York Herald Tribune this week ran a photograph of Miss Faulkner with its complimentary review, which mentioned her cleverness and her youth.
 Miss Faulkner attended the university from 1928-30, after graduating from Lincoln high school. She then spent a year in study in Rome. The scene of her novel is laid in Rome.
 First copies of "Friends and Romans" have been received this week by Lincoln friends and relatives of Miss Faulkner. Several Lincoln book shops are displaying the novel.
 The author recently returned to her duties on the Washington, D. C. Post, after a several weeks visit in Lincoln.

Period of Blistering Heat Can't Last Much Longer Blair Thinks

Professor T. A. Blair, assistant professor of meteorology, states that the period of very high temperature will probably not last much longer. Wednesday was the eighth consecutive day when the temperature has soared past 100 degrees, and the 24th day this season. The previous record was 27 days in 1913, which was mostly in August.
 The temperature last Sunday was 112 degrees, which was the highest ever recorded in Lincoln, the previous record having been 110. At Red Cloud the thermometer registered 117 on Sunday, the highest ever reported in the state.
 Rainfall, on the other hand, is the least ever recorded at Lincoln, a total of 5.36 inches having been received since January 1. The next lowest was 7.15 inches from January 1 to July 1 in 1910. That year, however, heavy rains fell in August. Other dry and hot years were 1901 and 1911, when considerable rain fell in August and September, and in 1913, when the fall was also a dry season.

IT IS a well known fact that MIDDISHADE suits at $35.00 are one of the outstanding values of the country. Since these suits are sold at prices fixed by the manufacturer, they are practically never offered at cut prices. However, some time ago, MAGEE'S purchased a group of suits at much less than the regular wholesale price, and we are giving this price advantage to our customers in this unusual sale of MIDDISHADE suits.

Since not all sizes in MIDDISHADE suits were available in this purchase, we have filled in with what we consider to be equal values in the well known KENSINGTON suits.

Every size... from 34 to 46... is available in this sale of suits which have been much higher in price... regulars... shorts... longs... stouts... and half stouts.
